Senate Plans Ban on Use of U. S. Flag by Belligerents

Leaders Defeat 3 Efforts to Amend Neutrality Bill By 2-to-1 Votes

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

A neutrality bill declaration against use of the American flag on belligerent vessels was tentatively accepted last night by Senate Administration leaders after they successfully beat down all other efforts to amend the bill.

Slow progress on the measure through a day of many speeches and lagging action dimmed prospects of passage before tomorrow. But on three votes, the leadership turned back efforts to make Presidential state of war proclamations mandatory, to deny Congress a similar authority, and to limit exports to belligerents to forestall a "war boom."

Last War Is Cited

Tentative acceptance of the prohibition against foreign vessels displaying the American standard was announced by Majority Leader Barkley after Senator Tobey (Republican), of New Hampshire, urged the amendment. Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, an isolationist leader, spoke in its behalf.

Both Tobey and Clark charged frequent use was made of the United States flag by belligerents in the last war to escape capture and "for purposes of deceit" and blamed submarining of some ships without notice on this practice.

Barkley said heavy penalties proposed by Clark and Tobey "obviously could not be enforced," but offered to accept what amounts to a policy declaration, with smaller penalties. Clark and Tobey indicated they would accept the modification.

War Boom Curb Beaten

Tobey's original amendment called for forfeit to this country of the offending vessel and its cargo, a $20,000 fine and two years' imprisonment of the ship captain. Clark sought to change this to bar use of American waters by all ships of nations whose vessels had been guilty of the practice. Barkley's proposed compromise would prohibit only the vessels which offended from American ports.

Last of the day's three amendments to be sent to defeat was the La Follette plan to avert a "war boom" and its aftermath by setting up an export control board to limit war-time exports to peace-time quotas. Quotas for belligerents would be set at the average exports of any four consecutive years in the last 12 and transshipment of goods to belligerents would be prohibited. The amendment was defeated, 66 to 21.

Defeated 61 to 28

The Senate rejected amendments which Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, declared would remove from the bill "a blank check to the President to choose that foreign policy which best meets his purpose without consulting Congress or anyone else."

The first Johnson amendment required the President to proclaim the existence of a foreign state of war without any determination of its effect on the security and peace of the United States. It was defeated 61 to 26.

The second amendment, which Johnson said was companion to the first, sought to strike out any power for Congress by concurrent resolution to determine the existence of a state of foreign war. Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, charged it was in conflict with the first, since it vested the authority entirely in the President. This amendment also was rejected, 75 to 14.

Defeat of the lost Johnson proposal was tantamount, assuming the pending bill passes, to voting Congress authority for the first time to invoke the neutrality law by declaring the existence of a foreign war.

The authority could be invoked if the President in the first instance failed to act. The Congressional determination that a war is in progress would not be subject to Presi-

More Business Urged by Hanes To End Deficit

Taxes, Unless 'Brutal', Can Not Supply U. S. Fund Needs, He Says

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 25.—A Roosevelt Administration fiscal officer, John W. Hanes, said today that "no matter how heavily we tax" there was no reasonable possibility of bringing up Federal income to meet Federal spending except through "more business."

Improved business, he declared in a speech at the ninth annual New York Herald Tribune Forum on current problems, would mean "more national (people's) income and I am convinced that this is the only logical way to improve our financial situation if we are to maintain our present economic system."

The country, he said, had developed "a ten-billion-dollar appetite with a five-billion-dollar (tax) pocketbook."

Roosevelt to Broadcast

President Roosevelt will bring the forum to its close tomorrow evening in a special broadcast from the White House, concluding a session devoted to the topic, "The War's Challenge to the United States."

Leopold III, King of the Belgians, will also be heard in a broadcast from Brussels. Leopold will speak first around 8 p. m., with President Roosevelt to follow around 11.

Hanes, who is Undersecretary of the Treasury, assumed outgo would remain at the present level and remarked that in the 1939 fiscal year Federal expenditures exceeded receipts by about $3,600,000,000 and went on:

"No matter how heavily we tax we cannot raise three or four (additional) billion dollars from present sources unless we get more on which to levy.

"Must Add to Income"

"* * * We now have the most powerful tax system in our history. If we could put substantially all our present unemployed back to work, the accompanying increase in national income would go far toward solving the problem.

Dies' Inquiry Denounced by Committeeman

Rep. Dempsey Assails Release of Names of Peace League Members

By John B. Oakes

The Dies committee was denounced on the floor of the House by one of its own members yesterday for an "un-American and reprehensible" act in publishing the names of 565 Federal employes who allegedly belong to the "Communist-controlled" American League for Peace and Democracy.

Launching his assault in the committee room a few moments after the list was given out, Representative Dempsey (Democrat), of New Mexico, continued the attack in the House chamber, where he was joined by Representative Coffee (Democrat), of Washington, and others.

In releasing the names, the committee stated that "there is no evidence" that the Government employes affiliated with the league are Communists. "But the fact that these Government employes are members of a Communist-front organization and apparently continued their membership long after this organization was exposed as being communistic justifies, in the opinion of the committee, the publication of this list," the statement continued.

"Membership and Mailing List"

Most prominent of the Government officials named on the list are Edwin S. Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board; Oscar Chapman, Assistant Secretary of the Interior; Louis Bloch, member of the Maritime Labor Board, and Mordecai Ezekiel, director of the A. A. A.

The list was originally given out as a "membership and mailing list," but the heading was later amended to read "membership list." However, Harry C. Lamberton, president of the local branch of the A. L. P. D., and an attorney in the Rural Electrification Administration, indicated that "individuals on the mailing list" were included as well as members. At least one person on the list, Nathan Witt, secretary of the National Labor Relations

Von Brauchitsch Goes to Front As Goering Paper Warns Britain

By C. Brooks Peters.

Berlin, Oct. 25.—While the Nazi press today thundered a unanimous warning of "relentless" war upon the British Isles, Fuehrer Hitler summoned 25 of his highest military advisers to a six-hour war conference at the Chancellery.

Exactly when, where, or how Germany's "full and crushing force" would be hurled against Great Britain, remained the secret of Hitler and the general staff, but the newspaper Essener National Zeitung—owned by Marshal Goering, chief of the air force, warned that "new weapons must speak." This was generally interpreted as a thinly veiled hint of intensive air bombardment of Great Britain.

Despite broad official hints that no major offensive is anticipated on the Western Front, it was noted that immediately after the chancellery war conference, Col. Gen. Walther von Brauchitsch, commander in chief of the army, left for the Western Front on what was described as "inspection."

Peace Hopes Abandoned

Whatever form German action may take, it became apparent today that the Nazi hierarchy has abandoned all hopes of peace. Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop's Danzig speech of last night is considered the final oral and diplomatic reckoning with Great Britain, amounting virtually to the declaration of war which Germany never has made formally.

"From now on," it is asserted in the Wilhelmstrasse, "deeds—not words—will demonstrate to Great Britain what it means to reject the hand of peace stretched forth by Fuehrer Hitler."

The German press 'with one voice' echoed Von Ribbbentrop's fight speech at Danzig last night with such assertions as "There will be no stopping now."

Patience Nearing End

The National Zeitung declared Nazi patience over Britain's "inability to understand" neared an end.

"The moment has come when the war desired by England must rain down upon the British Isles itself," National Zeitung said.

"The patience of a people has limits. In their boundless indignation the German people to a man now turn against the British war inciters in order, by a fight which hereafter will be relentless, to create the necessary guarantees for their security from such irresponsible machination."

"The dice have fallen, said Hitler's Voelkischer Beobachter. "Our

Germans Fail To Drive French From Lookout Near Forbach

By John Elliot.

Paris, Oct. 25.—French military scouts today reported the German Army fully prepared to launch a gigantic offensive against the Maginot Line and that Nazi troops and material were in advance positions, awaiting only the signal from Fuehrer Hitler.

[According to the Associated Press, reports of German troop concentrations led to a general belief the Nazis might be planning an attack in force despite bad weather.

[Military advices to the French general staff, according to this dispatch, said 90 German divisions, 1,500,000 men, were massed on the northern half of the front. It was estimated the German force could be lined up shoulder-to-shoulder three deep along the 100-mile stretch between the Rhine and Moselle rivers.

Attempt to Drive Out French

In the meantime German military activity has been confined to attempts to drive the French out of the Warndt forest, the only bit of German territory still held by the French army. The Nazis have been visibly annoyed by the French army's possession of the German village of Emmersweiler, an excellent observation point west of Forbach. The Nazis tried to dislodge the French from their footing there, but failed as they did yesterday.

The affray there today was a warm one while it lasted. The Germans used a company in their unsuccessful attempt to capture the post, held by 15 French soldiers. Moving to the left and right of the position, the Nazis sought to surround the French soldiers but the noncommissioned officer in charge, immediately sensing the German maneuver, gave the alarm signal to the French artillery and to a support company stationed some distance away.

Scouting Units Active

Immediately the French guns opened fire to cut off the German attackers and to prevent reinforcements from being brought up to the Nazis. At the same time the French infantry company quickly rushed up to the aid of the beleaguered post. The Germans were driven back to their own lines after a struggle that lasted an hour.

Other than this action, the Western Front has presented its recent

'No Patchwork Peace,' Eden Warns Berlin

Says British Fight To Restore Good Faith Among Nations

By Frank R. Kelley.

London, Oct. 25.—Dominions Secretary Anthony Eden declared in a broadcast to the British Empire tonight that "a patched-up peace, an armed truce, would be utterly unacceptable to us."

With the British about to gird the empire for years of war, and the opening in London within a few days of a two-week conference of cabinet ministers from the Dominions, Eden sent this message over the air:

"It is not because we love war, but because we hate it that we are determined to go on this time until we have finally made an end of a system that has grown to power by breaking promises and glorifying force."

Britain's task, as Eden described it, was not only to win the war, "but win the after-war and the latter may prove the more difficult task."

Aim at Unity

Without mentioning in detail Britain's war aims, Eden added:

"We believe that when we have gone through to the end a heavy responsibility which will also be an unrivaled opportunity will fall to the Allied powers. It will be our task then to give practical expression to the innermost feelings of men and women in all lands where servitude has not starved and frozen them.

"Those feelings are for closer European unity and a wider world understanding, for an international order that shall be respected, for religious toleration, for the denial and not the worship of an aggressive nationalism, for liberty, security and peace."

His words were generally viewed as a somewhat left-handed reply to Nazi Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop's Danzig speech last night.

Meanwhile, the British government took steps to consolidate the diplomatic and strategic victory it won when Turkey signed the mu-

Russia Attacks British List Of Contraband

Claims International Law Broken; Sweden May Get Ultimatum

By Witt Hancock
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Oct. 25.—Soviet Russia tonight refused to recognize validity of Britain's contraband regulations and informed the London government that she reserved the right to claim compensation for any losses incurred in enforcement of them.

In a note handed to British Ambassador Seeds by Assistant Commissar of Foreign Affairs Potemkin, the Soviet government declared it considered the British contraband list a violation of the principles of international law.

[Meanwhile it was reported in London today, without confirmation, that Russia is preparing, with Germany's consent, to send an ultimatum to Sweden demanding that the Swedish ports of Gothenburg and Karlskrona be placed at the disposal of the Soviet Navy.

Partitioning of Rumania Hinted

[Gothenburg is on the Kattegat, opposite the Jutland tip of Denmark, and Karlskrona is in southeasten Sweden on the Baltic. Both ports are of great strategic value in controlling shipping between the North Sea and the Baltic.

[According to the same source, the Soviet government may act first on a proposal for the partitioning of Rumania before acting on the Scandinavian plan.—Editor's note.]

The Russian note, replying to British notification of her contraband lists, said:

". . . the British government in fact proclaims contraband basic articles of mass consumption and creates the possibility of unlimited arbitrariness in classing all articles of popular consumption as war contraband.

"This inevitably leads to profound disorganization of the supply of the peaceful civil population with necessities, gravely endangers the health and lives of the peaceful population and portends innumerable calamities for the masses of people . . .

Moscow Hints American Ship's Prize Crew Had Right to Haven

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

The mystery as to the whereabouts of Capt. Joseph A. Gainard and the 40 members of the crew of the S. S. City of Flint was cleared up last night when Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt cabled the State Department from Moscow that the Americans were aboard their vessel at the Russian port of Murmansk.

The City of Flint, 5,000-ton freighter owned by the United States Maritime Commission, was taken to Murmansk as a prize of war by German sailors from the cruiser Emden, who substituted the Nazi swastika for the American flag.

Ambassador Steinhardt notified the State Department that the German sailors, who had been interned at Murmansk on arrival, had been released by the Soviet government. He said he was told that they had not been put back on the City of Flint.

The American diplomat did not say if the Soviet government had decided whether the United States was to be given the ship.

Concerned Over Crew

Officials here, from President Roosevelt down, were primarily concerned about the fate of the City of Flint's crew. For two days the State Department had been bombarding its representatives in Moscow, Berlin and Oslo for some word of the American, without avail until late last night.

News dispatches from Tromso, Norway, said Capt. Gainard and his men were still aboard the freighter when she left there for the voyage to Murmansk in charge of the Germans.

The City of Flint, carrying a cargo that was admittedly contraband in German eyes, was bound for Manchester, Liverpool and Glasgow when she was seized. Where she was seized was a question that remained unanswered.

Tass, the official Russian news agency, earlier announced:

"According to a report from Murmansk the internment of the German crew of the City of Flint has been canceled by marine authorities at Murmansk since it has been ascertained that the steamer was brought into the port for repairs to her machinery.

Cargo to Be Checked

"For the time being, the steamer remains at Murmansk for precise verification as to the composition of her cargo."

The Tass announcement was disappointing, even a little disturbing, to American officials. When Murmansk authorities interned the German prize crew it was assumed here that the Russians took the same view as the United States Government—that the Germans in taking the City of Flint into a neutral port had forfeited their claim to her.

The cancellation of the internment order and the decision that the City of Flint had been taken into Murmansk "for repairs to her machinery" put an entirely different face on the matter.

Under international law a prize ship or a belligerent ship can put into a neutral port for one of three reasons: Dangerous weather, unseaworthiness of the vessel and need for fuel or provisions.

Need of repairs to machinery would come under the heading of being unseaworthy. That this was the German explanation for taking the City of Flint into Murmansk was borne out by dispatches from

Keep Off the Grass! All 12,000,000 Feet Of It in D. C. Parks

Keep off the grass, all 12,000,000 square feet of it.

That much lawn area in the Capital's park system is now in process of being reseeded and fertilized, it was announced yesterday.

Blue grass and red top varieties are being used. About 30 tons of seed will be required.

Athenia Reported Having 59 Million To Buy Arms Here

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—The Daily News says the Department of Justice is investigating "impressive evidence that the Germans sank the Liner Athenia because they were convinced she carried a treasure of $59,000,000 in gold and securities to underwrite British war purchases."

The evidence came from sources close to two German marine salvage companies which have specialized in learning the exact manifests of treasure-bearing vessels, the News says.

Ruth Judd, Escaped Trunk Slayer, Promises to Return

By the Associated Press

Phoenix, Ariz., Oct. 25.—Trunk Murderess Winnie Ruth Judd, who engineered a clever ruse to flee the Arizona State Hospital, had left with Gov. Bob Jones tonight a promise to surrender after she sees her husband.

She added the condition, however, "that you promise me Dr Saxe (Dr. Louis J. Saxe, hospital superintendent) will be forced to leave me alone."

RUTH JUDD

The golden haired 34-year-old slayer of two youthful nurses explained in a letter to the Governor that she planned the escape only to see her parents here and her husband, William C. Judd, a patient in a Los Angeles veterans' hospital.

She saw her parents, the Rev. and Mrs. H. J. McKinnell, for 15 minutes shortly after gaining her freedom late last night by piling boxes, bottles and cakes of soap in her bed to simulate a body. During the visit she left the letter to the Governor.

Mrs. McKinnell brought the pencilled, and at times irrational, note to the chief executive today.

"Tonight I am running away," it said. "I hate everyone who has forced me to do it. May God punish them.

"I am only going to see my father and husband. I have a right to."

"Dr. Saxe tortures me. . . . I am

2 Traffic Deaths Send D. C. Toll For Year To 70

Two men were killed yesterday in District traffic, one by a hit-run automobile, their deaths bringing this year's toll to 70. The total this time in 1938 was 71.

Harry Baker, 52, of 212 Indiana avenue northwest, died at Casualty Hospital last night after being struck on Benning bridge. Police said the automobile failed to stop.

Pedestrians Have Right of Way As Lights Change

Washington pedestrians, trapped in the center of intersections by changing lights, have the right to continue their crossing without being molested—providing they leave the curb on a green signal, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer said yesterday.

"Pedestrians in the District," said Van Duzer, "have a guaranteed right of way over vehicles if they leave a curb on proper signals. They are entitled to complete their crossing even in the face of oncoming traffic."

Pocketships Loose on Raids, British Admit, After 3 Sinkings

By Edwin Stout.
Associated Press Staff Writer.

London, Oct. 25.—British naval forces hunted the seas tonight for elusive German submarines and surface raiders combining in new attacks on the nation's vital shipping.

In a heavy blow off Spain, German raiders were credited with sinking four merchant craft yesterday, strengthening the belief that Nazi submarines raiding the sea lanes had been augmented by the pocket battleships Deutschland and the Emden II, namesake of the famed World War "phantom cruiser."

[The Deutschland today sank the Norwegian freighter Lorentz W. Hansen, according to the Oslo Aftenposten, International News Service said. The paper reported that the crew of the Hansen, a vessel of 1,918 tons, was rescued by another Norwegian steamer.—Editor's note.]

Yesterday's sinkings, in which Britain lost 17,671 tons of ships in a single day, bringing her losses thus far to 45 ships, also gave rise to speculation that an entire convoy had been attacked.

The full extent of the day's shipping losses was not passed for publication until today, when a cryptic Admiralty statement said that three of the victims, the 4,413-ton Tafna, the 3,258-ton Ledbury, and the 2,474-ton Menin Ridge, had been "fired

The Federal Diary:

Bureau Chiefs 'Ho Hum' at Charges by Dies

Accusations on Peace League Memberships Greeted With Yawns

By Alfred Friendly

Pressed for comment on the Dies committee's listing of Federal employes who were members—or maybe just on the mailing list—of the American League for Peace and Democracy, a Commerce Department spokesman yesterday gave out a two-word reaction.

"Ho, hum," he said.

Other Federal administrators, breathless from yawning, were similarly galvanized into inaction.

An official of the Federal Housing Administration, told that the list revealed three of the agency's 4,707 employes had connections with the league, manfully strove to conceal his ennui.

"We're being undermined," he said.

No Purges Planned

At the Wage and Hour Administration, a personnel officer said the list of its employes stirred the organization to a hitherto unequaled degree of apathy.

An Agriculture officer, believing that the Sovietization of the Department was still some few hours distant, said that no purges would be undertaken immediately.

Suavely, the State Department personnel office reported that the lone employe in the department listed by the Dies Committee, a stenographer, had not been employed there since 1926.

The employes themselves, listed as members or on the mailing list of the league, had mixed reactions.

That of Dr. Louis Bloch, $10,000-a-year member of the Maritime Labor Board, was a detached attempt at recollection.

Can't Recall Status

"I wonder if I am a member now," he mused. "I paid an initiation fee to the league, but I attended only one meeting two years ago. I've been so busy with duties on the board I've never had time to give any thought to what my status in the league is at this point."

A young lawyer, asked for comment about his membership, noted that he had "never been conscious of being dominated by a Communist."

Choosing precise legal verbiage, he continued: "The fact that there are Communists in the human race would not induce me to resign therefrom."

Robert Nathan, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce national income studies, speculated on Representative Dies' own predicament.

"Statistically considered," said Nathan, "there can be no doubt of the fact that there are also Communists in Texas."

Calls Publication "Ill Advised"

Catherine Bauer, noted housing consultant on the staff of the United States Housing Administration, explained her presence on the list.

"The league is one of those organizations you join because you believe in peace and democracy," she said. "I've never been an active member. I don't know of any Communists in it. As a matter of fact, I don't believe I even know any Communists."

Another employe named said he thought the committee's publication of the list was "ill-advised."

"But since most of the moves of the Dies Committee have been ill-advised, I'm not surprised they did it," he added.

One of the few indignant persons to be found in the Government yesterday was a young man whose name was not on the list.

Member Feels Slighted

"I'm a member of the league in good standing," he shouted, "and I think this is a case of rank discrimination not to mention me. I may write an open letter of protest. Just because I'm from Texas, I don't see why my name should be omitted."

Indian Office employes named by the committee need not fear reprisals, John Collier, bureau director, inferred.

"If a good cause is ruined because some advocate of the cause happens to be a Communist, I would think almost any institution or movement might be so ruined," he said. "If a Communist joins a welfare movement that I am supporting, I can assure you this fact will not cause me to drop out of the welfare movement, nor would it induce me to discipline one of my employes or associates on the same basis.

"It may also be worthwhile to keep the record straight by stating that the Indian Service employes named by this investigation are not Communists."

"We'd All Be in Jail"

Murray W. Latimer, chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, declined to comment on the listing of several RRB employes or to tell what action he would take. He merely noted he had not been observed, "running out to get a copy of the list."

A Navy personnel officer called attention to the fact that before employment, the department thoroughly investigated the background of its personnel. The listing of several employes in the department, therefore, was not viewed as final proof of a nefarious character.

"If presence on a mailing list is a criminal offense," he said, "we'd all be in jail."

A Labor Department personnel officer promised that no action would be taken against the persons listed.

"What could we do about it if we wanted to?" he asked. "They're all American citizens."

REP. DEMPSEY — REP. MASON

Dempsey assailed release by Dies Committee of "membership and mailing list" of American League for Peace and Democracy as a "most damnable" and "most un-American action." Mason, who suggested list be made public, shouted back, "It's too bad you didn't go on record yesterday"

Board, denied membership in the league.

Denouncing "the utterly false statement that the league is a Communist-front organization," Lamberton termed publication of the list "an outrageous violation of liberties" and an attempt "to villify and intimidate Government employes."

At league offices last night it was stated that "no resignations" had come in and that "a number of additions" to the membership rolls were received during the day. One Government employe, a league official said, asked for "ten membership blanks which he intended to have filled."

Decision to publish the names was reached Tuesday at an executive session of the committee, attended by Representatives Dies, of Texas; Voorhis, of California; Starnes, of Alabama, and Casey, of Massachusetts (Democrats), and Mason, of Illinois (Republican).

Appearing too late at yesterday morning's session to delay release of the list, Dempsey stormed, "I want to protest this as most un-American. I think it is most reprehensible for this committee to do this. It is a most damnable thing."

Voorhis Opposes Release

Casey, who, with Voorhis, had raised objections to the publication at the executive session, emphasized that the committee did not know of a single Communist on the list.

Later, on the floor, Dempsey and Voorhis repeated their opposition.

"To publish this list of names even in conjunction with the committee's statement that it has no evidence that any of them is a Communist is to confuse this whole important question," Voorhis said. He added, that he thought the League was dominated by the Communist Party.

Excoriating the publication of the A. L. P. D. list, Representative Coffee, New Dealer, called on his colleagues and "the Roosevelt Administration" to "repudiate this unwarranted intrusion of American rights."

Lee Praises Committee

Asserting that he had addressed several A. L. P. D. meetings, Coffee asserted: "I have found no evidence of Communist control of this organization whatsoever." In obtaining the records of the Washington branch, said Coffee, the committee was "guilty of the very practices we are prone to inveigh against in Germany and Russia."

Representative Starnes retorted that the charge "has absolutely no foundation in truth."

Senator Lee (Democrat), Oklahoma, told the Senate yesterday that he hoped the Government would "eliminate" employes who support "Communist and Fascist organizations." Lee interrupted Senate neutrality debate to praise the work of the Dies committee.

More Indictments Indicated in Passport Fraud

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Oct. 25.—The Federal grand jury, which on Monday indicted Earl Browder, general secretary of the Communist Party in America, on a passport fraud charge, continued its investigation today into an alleged Communist "passport mill." The names of witnesses, if any, were kept secret.

State Department agents, aided by movers, brought to the jury rooms numerous filing cabinets taken from the office of World Tourists, Inc., a travel agency, of 175 Fifth Avenue.

Jacob Golis, manager, and two attorneys were seen outside the grand jury room.

It was indicated that the grand jury's next action in public would be the handing up of additional indictments similar to that on which Browder is at liberty on a $7,500 bond.

236 Railroads Cited in Civil Antitrust Suit

Refused to Co-operate With Bus Lines, Says Action Filed Here

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer.

The railroad industry became the defendant yesterday in one of the most sweeping antitrust suits ever brought by the Justice Department.

A civil proceeding, filed in the Federal District Court here, charged the Association of American Railroads, its officers and directors, and its 236 member railroads with violating the Sherman antitrust act by refusing to cooperate with motor carriers on rates and billing arrangements.

Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust cases, in a statement approved by Attorney General Murphy, revealed, meanwhile, that the defendants had cooperated fully in preparing the case by providing the department with information on which to proceed.

No Criminal Action

"In view of these circumstances," he said," and in view of the fact that a civil suit will adequately present the issues involved, the department believes that a criminal action is inappropriate."

The defendant carriers, which include all the important roads in the country, have combined to restrain trade, Arnold said, "by agreeing not to extend to motor carriers the same cooperation in the carriage of freight and passengers which they extend to each other."

Truck and bus lines are recognized as major competitors of railroads.

The agreement not to cooperate, Arnold declared, consists of resolutions passed by the Association of American Railroads.

J. J. Pelley, president of the A. A. R., said he understood the suit was based on a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the association on June 23, 1937.

The resolution contains a declaration of policy that the public interest will be served and the credit of the railroads enhanced if they refrain from establishing with truck or bus lines through routes, or joint rates or fares, which invade the territory of other railroads.

The resolution also says it is not desirable for railroads to enter into joint billing arrangements with motor carriers, or to enhance charges to them, except where their services are within a terminal district.

No More Than Advice

Pelley declared the resolution "amounts to no more than advice to its members, representing the consensus of opinion as to what constitutes sound policy.

He pointed out that theer was no declaration of policy against through routes and joint rates "unless the effect of such action is to cause one railroad to invade the territory of another."

Under the Interstate Commerce act, he explained, a railroad may not be constructed, nor may it operate in the territory of another railroad, without securing permission from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"It is obvious," Pelley added, "that if railroads and motor carriers are to establish joint through routes and joint rates under which the territory of one railroad is invaded by another, the intent of the law would be defeated."

The complaint which gave rise to the proceeding, it was learned, came not from motor carriers, but from the Chicago Great Western Railroad among others. The Chicago Great Western is a member of the association.

Arnold explained that "one large Middlewestern railroad" refused to subscribe to the association's policy "and has successfully established coordinated service with a motor carrier whereby it transports between Chicago and St. Paul loaded trailers consigned to it by the motor carrier."

Pelley declared the AAR had not undertaken to impose penalties or restrictions on this railroad. He intimated that this showed member roads were free to disregard the association's policy.

Wallace Urges A Third Term; Minton Sorry

Democratic Whip Joins Republicans In Deploring Remarks

By The Associated Press

Secretary Wallace's advocacy of a third term for President Roosevelt, coming at a time when the Administration has asked adjournment of politics and nonpartisan consideration of neutrality problems, irritated some Republicans and Democrats in Congress yesterday.

Administration leaders generally refrained from public comment, but Senator Minton, of Indiana, the Democratic whip, observed that this was no time to discuss such matters—that there would be plenty of time to do so next year. And Senator Thomas (Democrat), Utah, an Administration supporter who heads the Senate Labor Committee, observed:

"This is the very worst time to be talking about politics, while the Senate is discussing a nonpartisan neutrality measure. Therefore, I have nothing to say at the present time."

Links War, Third Term

Wallace said in an interview at San Francisco that the war abroad had made plain the desirability of a third term for Mr. Roosevelt.

"Mr. Roosevelt's background seems to equip him with exceptional qualifications as a helmsman to steer the country through both foreign and domestic troubles to a safe harbor.

"The President's experience and foreign contacts which have extended over a period of 45 years, put him in a very unusual position to understand what's up in the foreign field."

Martin Not Surprised

When word of the statement reached Capitol Hill, Representative Martin, of Massachusetts, the Republican House leader, said he regarded it as public confirmation of forecasts that there would be a third-term candidacy.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan; Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, and Representative Drewry (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the Democratic Congressional Committee, were among those who took issue with the view expressed by Wallace.

Vandenberg commented:

"I am unable to understand why a war against unprecedented dictatorial power abroad should be a reason why America must embrace unprecedented executive authority at home. Secretary Wallace has made another enthusiastic error."

Burke made plain that his present support of the Administration's neutrality revision bill did not mean he would relax his opposition to a third term candidacy.

Drewry said he was opposed to a third term for anyone.

$78,908,525 Arms Licenses Revoked

The State Department announced yesterday that $78,908,525 in export licenses for shipment of arms to belligerents had been revoked since invocation of the neutrality act September 5.

France was the principal sufferer, with revoked licenses amounting to $58,418,113.

Two Attack, Beat D. C. Girl; Youth Is Held

Second Man Sought; Victim Lured Into Auto at Bus Stop

A 22-year-old youth was charged with criminal attack and robbery of a young woman and was held under $15,000 bond last night while police sought a second man in connection with the case.

Edward Leroy Robbins, 22, of the 1300 block Massachusetts avenue northwest, was accused of the crimes after an all-day grilling by robbery squad detectives.

Police requested the victim's name be withheld after she agreed to prosecute. Her attackers took $9 from her pocketbook, she said.

Waiting for Bus

She said she was waiting for a bus on the Fourteenth street side of Thomas Circle early yesterday when a youth drove up and asked if he could take her home. At first she said she refused but later consented and got into the automobile.

After she had ridden several blocks, she related, a second man, who was concealed in the back of the vehicle, rose and said, "Take her to No. 9, lieutenant."

Shocked by the appearance of the second man, the woman said she asked them what she had done to be arrested and was then struck in the face by the man in the back seat. Her assailants held her in the car and prevented her from screaming, she declared, and drove to the 3100 block Eaves street northeast, where they beat and criminally attacked her.

Driving back toward the city, the woman said the automobile ran out of gasoline and while one man went to get fuel the one left to guard her attacked her again. When the second man returned he assaulted her also, she said, and then drove her back to a point near where she first entered their machine.

She reported to police and gave them the license numbers of the automobile. Robbins later was arrested and police began an intensive search for the other man.

John Upperman Denies Tampering With Jordon Jury

Former Deputy United States Marshal John B. Upperman testified that he did not "tamper" with the jury that condemned Thomas Jordon to death for the Garden T Shoppe holdup murder by giving the jurors either legal instructions or a copy of the District law code.

Jordon's habeas corpus hearing, by which he seeks a new trial, closed before Chief Justice Wheat of the District Court yesterday. Assistant District Attorneys Wilson and Krouse and James J. Laughlin, Jordon's counsel, will argue the writ today.

During four days of testimony ten of the jurors who tried Jordon for the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Jaynes in the holdup, supported Upperman's story, denying that he gave them either instructions or the code. Only Juror Israel F. Good claimed the code was taken to the jury room.

Press Defeated In Quiz Contest

Four mathematically minded men from the General Accounting Office last night defeated a Washington Post team by 630 to 425 in a "quiz contest" sponsored by the Federal Employes Playhouse. An audience of 400 heard the program in the Agriculture Department auditorium.

The G. A. O. brain trust consisted of Frank Finnell, Glen Moore, Harold Stepler and John Bradbury.

Representing The Post were Scott Hart, Edward Folliard, Ben Dulaney and Hedley Donovan.

Many Concerned Over Fate Of Dog Who Guarded Mistress

Poodle Will Get a Week's Reprieve, Pound Head Pomises, Then Be Executed Unless Owner's Husband or Friends Provide Home

An unprepossessing poodle was the Animal Rescue League's No. 1 boarder yesterday, the subject of at least a dozen telephone calls.

Impressed by published stories of the animal's loyalty in remaining at the side of its dead mistress, Mrs. Susie Forsyth, sympathizers kept the league phone busy throughout the day, asking what would happen to the poodle.

Mrs. Forsyth's death was officially attributed to natural causes yesterday. Police broke into her home at 1106 Tenth street northwest Tuesday night and found her body on the living room floor. It is believed she had been dead about three days when found.

John Mewshaw, manager of the Animal Rescue League, told callers that the poodle, an old female, will be kept until police order its release. Daniel Forsyth, husband of the dead woman and a patient in Emergency Hospital, will be permitted to claim the pet if he desires, Mewshaw said.

The poodle's reprieve is good for at least a week, the rescue league manager said, but after that it will be the execution chamber for her if she isn't taken away by someone.

U. S. Cafe Talks Deadlocked; 700 May Strike

Shutdown Wednesday Can't Be Avoided, Union Agent Believes

A strike involving 700 employes in most of the Government cafeterias was threatened last night after a stalemate in negotiations Tuesday between the C. I. O. Cafeteria Workers Union and the Welfare and Recreation Association.

Jack Mink, union agent, said he did not see how a strike could be avoided and that the union was making preparations for a shutdown on Wednesday.

A statement by the association, however, said negotiations "have not necessarily broken down and it is our belief that a strike in the Government cafeterias would be absolutely unnecessary."

Present Contract Extended

The union's present contract expired July 1 but was extended three months. The union charges, the association refused to extend a check-off system, and declined to grant demands for a general 2½ cents an hour wage increase, 6 days annual sick leave, recognition of grievance committees and a union shop.

The association statement, however, declared that agreement was reached on grievance committees, that it had offered a wage increase of 1½ cents for three of the four grades of employes, and reduction in food prices which would benefit all employes.

Complainis Cited

The association is now paying wages about 33 per cent higher than that paid in commercial establishments to the same grade of employes, the statement said.

Reason for cancellation of the check-off, association officers explained, lay in complaint of non-union members against paying an amount equal to union dues to a charitable organization, as provided in the present contract. The association has offered in return, a "voluntary check-off" to apply to all union members who desire it, officials said.

They added that in the event of a strike they intended continuing operation of all the cafeterias, although with reduced service.

Rotarians Revolt, to Celebrate Old-Fashioned Thanksgiving

Club Announces Party for November 30 At Ladies' Day Luncheon; No Mention Is Made of Holiday as Set by Roosevelt

Washington witnessed its first revolt yesterday against the President's proclamation to change Thanksgiving.

The revolutionists were members of the Washington Rotary Club, organization of business and civic leaders.

Action came at the club's annual Ladies' Day luncheon at the Willard Hotel. The ladies were advised that the Rotarians would be absent from home the night of November 30, when "an old-fashioned Thanksgiving Day party" would be held at the Kenwood Club, featuring turkey. The ladies, in fact, were invited, too.

No event was announced for November 23, the new Thanksgiving Day proclaimed by the President, to an accompanying national reaction several months ago.

Afterward, Rotarians were reticent. One said: "We can celebrate two Thanksgiving Days now." Another said the date was fixed by the club "with deliberation." Another said it seemed obvious what the club had in mind by fixing the party on the traditional Thanksgiving date.

Three hundred and forty-five Rotarians, their wives and children attended the annual event, ate tomatoes stuffed with chicken salad, and ice cream, saw an elaborate floor show and got this Thanksgiving Day business straightened out as far as Washington Rotary is concerned.

Rumania Joins Turks in Peace Plea to Soviet

Rome, Budapest See Russian Move Soon Against Bessarabia

By the United Press

Bucharest, Rumania, Oct. 25.—Rumania and Turkey were reported today to have sent representatives of their foreign offices to Moscow carrying proposals reportedly designed to erase Russian displeasure over Turkey's mutual aid alliance with Britain and France.

It was learned that the representatives will seek to co-ordinate commitments entered into by Turkey with Britain and France with Russia's proposal for a Black Sea pact, declined by Turkey as threatening her independence. The representatives left yesterday for Moscow, it was said.

Rumania hopes to obtain from Russia guarantees of her territorial integrity and independence similar to those obtained from Britain and France last April. At that time the Rumanian government repeatedly emphasized that Rumania would gladly accept similar guarantees from other countries.

Rumania then had Berlin chiefly in mind. Since Fuehrer Hitler, however, turned a cold shoulder to these overtures, Rumania now seems to think Russia is the second best bet, especially as Russia, by the partition of Poland, has increased considerably her common frontier with Rumania.

Diplomats here are greatly interested in the outcome of this new initiative but doubt that Moscow, in view of the accomplished fact of the Turkish-British-French alliance, will be willing to accept the belated proposals of Turkey and Rumania.

Bessarabia Held Easy Prey

Budapest, Oct. 25 (AP).—Diplomats familiar with the Balkans tonight expressed the opinion that should Soviet Russia see fit to extend her influence by moving into the Rumanian province of Bessarabia she would be met with little or no resistance from King Carol's government.

These sources, who said they expected Russian action in the near future if she does intend to push her influence in to southeastern Europe, advanced the belief that Rumania would be compelled to fight alone if she sould insist upon defending Bessarabia with arms.

In such event, they said, Hungary probably would move immediately into Transylvania, which she lost to Rumania after the World War, as a "self-defense" measure against any further Communist expansion into Central Europe.

Clear indications of Russian intentions againt Bessarabia have been lacking so far, however. Rumania has received official assurances that Moscow has no demands on that former Soviet territory.

But despite these assurances new tension has been reported in Rumania and King Carol's envoys to Bulgaria and Turkey have been summoned home for consultation.

Political circles have reported from Rumania that "important developments are imminent in the Balkans."

Italy Holds Key

Rumanian officials have maintained stoutly that their country would fight, even without allies if necessary, to maintain her territorial integrity, but these diplomats pointed out that:

Turkey, aligned with Rumania in the Balkan Entente, was exempted from fighting Russia under her new mutual assistance pact with Britain and France.

The Western Powers already have closed their eyes to the Soviet march into Poland. Would they do likewise in event of a similar action in Rumania?

Italy and Yugoslavia are authoritatively reported here to be backing Hungary, should she advance to the Carpathians in Rumania—occupying the former Hungarian province of Transylvania in the meantime—to hold that natural barrier against communism.

(Dispatches from Rome today said informed Fascists were of the opinion Italy, having fought to resist communism in Spain, would resist any Communist penetration into Southeastern Europe where she regards her interests as paramount. However, they did not go so far as to say assurances of military aid already had been given to Hungary in the event she took up arms to hold the Carpathian line—assurances which authoritative quarters in Budapest said had been given.)

Informed quarters here expressed the belief Britain and France would hesitate to declare war on Hungary, Yugoslavia and Italy.

Without Turkey's help, diplomats said, it virtually would be impossible for the western powers to fulfill their guarantees of independence to Rumania.

(Although the Turkish-British-French pact exempted Turkey from involvement in any war among Russia and the Western Allies, it provided that she go to the aid of the Allies in the event they had to fight to fulfill their guarantees to Rumania and Greece.)

To further complicate the British-French position in this part of Europe, Balkan diplomats said the position of Bulgaria would have to be borne in mind. Bulgaria never has abandoned her claims to Dobruja, now Rumanian territory.

tranquillity during the last 24 hours.

The morning communique said: "On the whole, the night has been quiet. Patrol and artillery activity to the west of the Saar."

Tonight's communique said: "Our reconnaissance elements and those of the enemy showed a certain activity in the course of the day. We repulsed a German detachment in the region neighboring the Moselle."

Alert French troops in the Rhine sector, however, inflicted a defeat on Nazi Propaganda Chief Goebbels. Since the outbreak of the war practically the only fighting that has been done along the Rhine has been a one-sided war on the air, conducted by the German propaganda ministry.

For the last two months the Nazis have been making the welkin ring day and night all the way along the Rhine from Lauterbourg to Huningue (Huningen) with their loud speakers broadcasting to the French soldiers such messages as "Hitler doesn't want to wage war on France" and "England will fight to the last Frenchman."

Most of these loudspeakers are stationary but some are mounted on automobiles that travel up and down the Rhine Valley.

Today a group of French soldiers on guard duty on the Rhine opposite the German town of Alt Brisach, about 30 miles above the Swiss border, decided to enliven the ennui of the "Watch on the Rhine" by playing a trick on Goebbels' broadcasters.

They listened intently to the flow of propaganda and soon spotted a motor van equipped with a loudspeaker parked under a clump of trees near the bank of the river. They opened fire on it with a machine gun and in a few moments the loudspeaker was silenced permanently. A report of the shooting spread to other French posts and these waited their turn to practice their marksmanship on other loudspeakers.

Premier Daladier had a long conference late today with Gen. Gamelin, commander in chief of the Allied forces.

Reports of new German troop concentrations behind the Siegfried Line led military observers to the belief the Germans might be planning an attack in force despite bad weather along the front.

The French apparently are determined to rest on defensive tactics, trusting to a winter-long blockade to crack Germany.

French Civilians Withdraw

Basel, Switzerland, Oct. 25 (AP). French civilians began a complete withdrawal today from another 6-mile strip along the Rhine River frontier from Strasbourg south to a point below the Swiss frontier.

When this move is completed the area abandoned will extend 12 miles back from the Rhine.

Reason for the exodus was not immediately learned. Some military observers associated it with recent destruction of three Rhine roalroad bridges and the Kembs Dam footbridge by the French, taken as an indication that the French command was preparing for a German attack across the river from Baden.

Others, however, said the exodus was a routine measure inspired by the French army's need of more quarters for troops moving into the Rhineland front.

These observers reported a large contingent of British troops was moving gradually into the Rhineland, first adapting themselves to life in the third line of Maginot fortresses at the Vosges mountains, then moving forward into the second line of defenses on the eastern slopes of the Vosges.

City of Flint Crew Is Aboard Vessel

Berlin. An Associated Press dispatch from Berlin said:

"German quarters informally said the ship was taken because of contraband aboard. She was taken to Tromso (Norway), these quarters said, because she was 'not seaworthy.' For a similar reason, it was indicated, she was then taken to Murmansk, where the prize crew was 'detained.'"

According to a Berlin version, the "unseaworthiness" of the City of Flint was caused by the American crew's concealment of maps essential for navigation. Hence, German quarters said, the ship could not proceed safely through the mined areas of the North and Baltic seas.

The American Government, it has been made clear, is prepared to argue that if a belligerent nation seizes a vessel and takes that vessel into a neutral harbor, then the belligerent loses all rights to the prize.

In a statement made public by the State Department last night, it was revealed that German submarines had stopped two American vessels since the outbreak of the war.

The first was the Wacosta, owned by the Waterman Steamship Co., which was stopped by a German U-boat on September 9. The State Department said the Wacosta was "detained" for three hours and that her papers were searched and her holds examined.

The second case was that of the Hybert, owned by the Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., which was detained by a German submarine for two hours on September 10. After her papers were examined, she was "warned not to use her radio for 24 hours."

The State Department also revealed that the Exochorda, of the American Export Line, was boarded by French authorities at Marseille and that two seamen of German nationality were removed. This was on September 6.

The State Department listed 20 vessels, not counting the City of Flint, that had been "detained." The majority had been stopped—and in some cases relieved of their cargoes—by British authorities.

iron determination will call a halt once and for all to English conceit and challenges.

"Germany has taken up the English challenger's gauntlet."

Coupled with the threat of merciless air bombings was a warning by the semiofficial Deutscher Dienst to European neutrals that Germany would intensify her submarine war against British sea-borne commerce. Neutrals were warned that if they increase their trade to Britain at Germany's expense "it will mean the death of neutral trade."

It was said that Germany's counterattack on the British blockade was designed to turn the tables and obtain neutral trade prevented from reaching Britain.

It appeared that the Deutscher Dienst warning referred principally to the Scandinavian countries because Germany already has been virtually cut off from the United States and South America.

Danes Report Warning

(The Danish radio announced tonight, according to a United Press dispatch from Copenhagen, that the German ambassador had warned Danish citizens to keep off British and French vessels and also warned that Danish ships would be regarded as enemies if escorted by British or French convoys.)

Heretofore the German air attacks on the British have been relatively few, and are said to have been mere "feelers." That they may now begin more earnestly and become more frequent, and as Von Ribbentrop said last night, "open the eyes of Chamberlain and those who share with him the responsibility for this war," is believed in Berlin to be more than probable.

If it is true the Germans have so speeded up the technique of building submarines that these craft are now in mass production with the ocean-going types being built within three months and several completed submarines weekly being turned out, then it is not difficult to imagine how the scope of German sea warfare against the British can be widened.

Count on Submarines

The Germans believe, furthermore, that their submarine successes within the heavily fortified British naval base of Scapa Flow as well as against the aircraft carrier Courageous on the high seas indicate the effect, practical and psychological, which a large fleet of these undersea vessels might have on Great Britain's command of the seas.

Informed circles of Berlin believe differences will be made soon, militarily, between the French and the British just as they have been and are being made officially. Von Ribbentrop last night referred only in a few words, and those were not unkind, to the French as being the victims of British propaganda pressure.

Nazis Report Attack

The German high command's daily communique on war activities along the Western Front announced a Nazi attack west of Voelkingen, German village between Saarbruecken and Saarlautern. The attack, of minor proportions, forced French troops back and beyond the frontier, the communique claimed.

"No further actions," said the war minister.

The air ministry today declared it had no knowledge of the alleged British flight over Berlin, Hamburg and Magdenburg last night, as announced in London.

The heavy task of supervising the repatriation of Germans from the Baltic states and other foreign countries, as propounded in a plan by Hitler, tonight was placed in charge of Heinrich Himmler, chief of all German police.

Belgrade, Oct. 26.—Economic talks between Italian and Yugoslav delegations were concluded last night in an agreement to leave mutual trading on the present clearing basis.

Italy will slightly increase her timber purchases but showed no interest in reducing Yugoslavia's debt to her of roughly 138,000,000 dinars (about $2,300,000) by any sizable increase in imports.

The impression here is that this sum will be held as a reserve for Italy to finance engineering contracts which she hopes to obtain if German undertakings are prevented by the war.

Quebec Votes DuPlessis Out By Landslide

Liberals Take 64 of 86 Seats, 6 Uncertain; He Wins Own Back

By John MacCormac
Copyright by New York Times.

Montreal, Quebec, Oct. 25.—French Canada shouted an emphatic "non" tonight to the suggestion that it should stand aloof from the rest of Canada in supporting the war effort of the British Empire.

The National Union government of Premier Maurice DuPlessis, who had called a general election in protest against the alleged infringement of Quebec's autonomy by the war measures of the federal government, was swept out of office in one of the most remarkable overturns in the electoral history of this province.

His tremendous majority—71 seats out of a total of 86—was turned inside out, his cabinet was riddled, and the young political chieftain who had risen like a rocket from obscurity to a seemingly impregnable position in the public life of his province plummeted down to defeat after three short years of office.

DuPlessis Reelected

The turnover was of landslide proportions. At 10:40 p. m. 64 Liberals, 14 National Union and 1 Independent Party members had been elected. Six seats were undecided. One of the 86 seats in the provincial legislature is to be filled at a later election.

Premier Duplessis himself was elected but at least six of his cabinet ministers were defeated.

The election result was a victory for the party of Canadian Prime Minister Mackenzie King, under whose leadership Canada went to war.

Former Premier Adelard Godbout, provincial head of the Liberals, returns to power as a result of the election.

Delegates Ready to Quit

DuPlessis had represented this election as "French Canada's fight for survival." His Liberal opponents had denounced it as a vicious attempt to camouflage the bankruptcy his government has made of Quebec's finances by raising a racial issue where no racial issue existed.

Quebec's three representatives in the federal Liberal government had announced that if DuPlessis won they would accept it as indication that Quebec did not want to participate in Canada's war effort, and would accordingly resign their seats.

DuPlessis had represented a vote for him would be a vote against conscription. His Liberal opponents had countered this with the argument that the best guarantee that conscription would not be enforced was the presence of Quebec ministers in a Liberal government at Ottawa.

The third party in this three-cornered contest was the "National Action" headed by Paul Gouin.

The fact that Gouin was ignored and DuPlessis was snowed under seems to indicate that French Canadians were determined not to be maneuvered into a position where the rest of Canada would regard them almost as aliens.

Italians Back Von Ribbentrop But Make Neutrality Clear

By Herbert L. Matthews.
Copyright by New York Times.

Rome, Oct. 25.—German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop's Danzig speech was strongly supported in the Italian press today. This is the clearest indication yet given that outwardly and officially Italy stands by Germany, believes in the justice of the German cause and hopes that Germany will win. At the same time, it is equally clear that Italy will maintain strict neutrality.

Virginio Gayda shows that better than anybody, and precisely because he said nothing new. He supports Von Ribbentrop by a discussion of the origins of the war, which the foreign minister had given, and the Versailles Treaty, and the attitude of the Polish government in the final period.

"Italy fully agrees with Germany on the necessity of revising the Versailles Treaty," writes Gayda.

Germany's policy toward Poland "tended to create a system of peace and fruitful collaboration between the two neighboring states, and above all to preserve peace in Europe."

"Unfortunately," continues Gayda, Warsaw rejected the "frank offer" of Fuehrer Hitler.

"Germany will fight to its conclusion this useless and anti-European war which has been imposed on her," says Regina Fascista. "Some people will have time to meditate whether they really did well in disdaining the hand which the German people stretched out for a just peace."

"Chamberlain, answering Hitler, says that England awaits acts and not words," says Premier Mussolini's Populo d'Italia at the end of a very pro-German editorial. "Very well. Ribbentrop, in announcing 'further events,' has promised there will be 'acts.'"

It is only the Osservatore Romano, Vatican newspaper, which points out that when Von Ribbentrop said Germany's eastern frontiers were definitely fixed, he presumably meant two things; "That Germany does not now intend to construct any autonomous Polish state, and that she wants to warn Russia, who is continually advancing in the Balkans.

Italy's investment in Ethiopia stands at about 5,000,000,000 lire (about $252,000,000), according to a report submitted today by Gen. Attilio Teruzzi, undersecretary for Africa.

The report says more than 20,000 Italians are now residents of Ethiopia, as compared with 6,000 Europeans under the Haile Selassie reign

Japan Offers Special Facilities To U. S. Exporters in China

Embassy Here Asserts All American Cargoes Delayed in Tokyo-Dominated Sections Are Released With Present Shipment

By Hedley Donovan.

Evidence of an effort to improve Japanese-American relations was seen here yesterday in announcement by the Japanese Embassy that American exporters have been given special facilities for shipments from conquered areas of China to the United States.

A lace and embroidery cargo valued at 3,540,000 Chinese dollars, handled by American, Chinese and British firms, will be shipped from Shanghai Saturday, according to the embassy statement. It will be transhipped after transportation from Swatow in a Japanese vessel.

Movement of these goods, coming after shipment three weeks ago from Hankow of about 6,000 tons of tung oil, "releases" all American cargoes "delayed" in export from Japanese-dominated sections of China, an embassy spokesman asserted.

Official sources here, however, maintained that numerous cargoes consigned to the United States are still being held up by Japanese military authorities in China.

Reaction to the embassy statement appeared to attach less importance to the lace cargo than to the fact that the Japanese government should wish to give publicity in this country to the shipment.

Japanese-American relations today reach the halfway point in the "probation" period between July 26, when notice of abrogation of the commercial treaty of 1911 was served on Tokyo, and January 26 when the pact actually expires, it was pointed out. Japanese appeals to American public opinion have been expected with increasing frequency as the expiration date nears.

The embassy statement notes that the exporters concerned in the lace transaction donated 175,000 Chinese dollars to the local (Swatow) welfare committee as an expression of their appreciation of the efforts of the Japanese authorities in affording the export facilities.

"The donation," according to the announcement, "will be used for the general welfare and for the maintenance of peace and order in the locality."

Child Agencies Seek to Banish 'Baby Broker'

Legislative Program Formulated to Help Unmarried Mothers

To banish the "baby broker," to humanize dealing with problems of the unmarried mother and her child, and to provide other safeguards for dependent children, the Child Welfare Division of the Council of Social Agencies yesterday focused its efforts on a legislative program to put before Congress at its next regular session.

Social workers described conditions complicating the plight of children and prompting moves for these three pieces of legislation:

A licensing law for all child-caring agencies and individuals.

Authorization for the Board of Public Welfare to care for dependent children without court commitment.

A new law dealing with the problems of the unmarried mother to replace the "bastardy law" of 1912.

"Poisonous Atmosphere"

Miss Mildred Terrett, chairman of the sub-committee on the licensing law, said she could point out foster homes with a "positively poisonous" atmosphere, and agencies by which children are placed "without due consideration for the character of the foster parents."

"There should be a law that would check activities of the "baby broker."

"The independent boarding home is a great problem. In many cases the home has little or no income and wants to take in children as a means of livelihood," said Miss Lucia Murchison, director of medical social service for the Health Department.

Legislation to replace the "bastardy act" would open the way for the father to acknowledge paternity of an illegitimate child without embarrassing court procedure, Albert Conradis, chairman of the sub-committee on the legislation, explained.

Program Held Jeopardized

The stamping of "illegitimate" across a birth certificate as a handicap to the child whenever he had to show a certificate, should be changed, Conradis asserted.

Children temporarily in need of care could be helped by the Board of Public Welfare without court commitment under the third piece of legislation, explained by Miss Alice Padgett, chairman of the sub-committee.

Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, chairman of the division's legislative committee, said the present program in child welfare program in child welfare "is jeopardized unless we continue to make progress."

Dr. John W. Rustin, chairman of the division and pastor of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, presided at the luncheon meeting at the E street Y. W. C. A.

On the subcommittee with Miss Terrett, who is executive of the Children's Protective Association, are Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, director of the bureau of maternal and child welfare, Health Department; Dr. Agnes Hanna, of the Children's Bureau. Working with Conradis on the illegitimacy legislation are Ray Everett, director of the Social Hygiene Society; Capt. Rhoda Milliken, of the woman's bureau, Metropolitan Police; Miss Jean Cole, superintendent of Florence Crittenton Home. The subcommittee, headed by Miss Padgett, of the Catholic University School of Social Work, includes Miss A. Patricia Morse, supervisor of child welfare division, Board of Public Welfare; Dr. Hanna, Miss Marita Redington, supervisor of children's division, Catholic Charities; Mrs. Paul Appleby, chairman, child welfare committee, League of Women Voters.

of the British government of September 6 and refuses to recognize any validity of this note . . . and that it does not recognize any validity of . . . a system of control of merchant ships of neutral countries in ports specially designated for this purpose . . .

"Such measures violate the elementary principles of the freedom of merchant shipping . . . The Soviet government cannot fail to declare that merchant ships of the U. S. S. R. are state property and for this reason alone should not be subjected to any measures of compulsion applied to privately owned merchant ships."

In authoritative circles, meantime, the belief was expressed that the Russian economic delegation now en route to Berlin would take up there the question of buying armor plate and naval technical instruments. The delegation is headed by I. T. Tevosyan, Soviet shipping commissar.

Lacks Materials and Instruments

It was said that Russia is making a determined effort to build up her fleet but is sadly lacking in many materials and instruments necessary in modern ships. However, it was pointed out, Germany is not in a position to build entire warships for Soviet Russia.

Election results from the Western Ukraine and White Russian districts seized by Soviet Russia in partitioning Poland with Germany showed at least some opposition to Soviet rule.

New elections will be held in 11 districts where government-designated candidates failed to get the necessary majority for election to new Peoples' Assemblies of the Soviet Union.

Indication of opposition was given by less than 10 per cent of the voters, however.

Since no substitute candidates were proposed, opposing voters could only scratch the government candidate's name.

Official returns from the Sunday election said 4,433,997 of the 4,776,275 eligible electors voted in the Western Ukraine and that candidates' names were scratched on 325,918 ballots.

In White Russia 2,672,280 of 2,763,191 eligibles voted, with 247,245 scratches.

Newly elected delegates of the Western Ukraine, 1,484 in all, convene tomorrow at Lwow and on Saturday the 927 delegates of White Russia will meet at Belostok (Bialystok).

Objection Called Fantastic

London (Thursday), Oct. 26 (AP).—The British Press Association quoted an unnamed authority on international law today as saying Soviet Russia's objection to the British contraband list was "fantastic."

"The old-time distinction of contraband as such articles as rifles and ammunition has gone by the board," he was quoted. "Any government can declare that anything of use to the enemy is contraband."

More Business Urged by Hanes

emphasis on adding to the national income. We must realize that since we live in a capitalistic system the healthy business of the country is our business; that without volume we go broke because of the overhead, whether the business be private or public.

"After taking all possible precautions and setting up all possible regulations against bad and crooked business, let us find every means we can devise to encourage honest business."

He said that even if "all of a widely discussed group of amendments were enacted" the personal income tax revenues would be increased by less than $250,000,000, and that to produce as much as one billion more, at the present people's income level, would "require a brutal increase" in rates.

Upper Brackets Too High

In any case, he added, any increases from that source would have to be in the middle and lower brackets since the upper brackets are perhaps already too high for the production of maximum returns. In my opinion, they have passed the point of diminishing returns."

As to the corporation income tax, he remarked that even if it were doubled—"and if for the purposes of argument no dimunition resulted in tax base or revenues elsewhere"—the resultant increase would be only 1¼ billion.

Similarly, he said, "an enormous rise in rates" in the estate and gift taxes would bring in not more than $400,000,000. Then he summed up:

"Thus, outside the sales or excise taxes, we cannot hope to raise more than about 2½ billions, even with rates more drastic than have ever been seriously contemplated. To bring in that much at present national income levels would require really shocking tax increases and would, I believe, defeat the object sought."

The problem of the needed additional 3 to 4 billions, he said, was "without regard to the need for funds to retire outstanding debt."

Speaking on "controlling war profits," Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming said "enlightened self-interest" would prompt "every person who has anything to do with the charges which are made for commodities at any stage between the production of the raw material and the sale of the finished article to keep those charges from rising above a justifiable level."

"The avoidance of exploitation of consumers through profiteering," he added, "is the only sure and certain way to prevent the development of an irresistible demand for Government control.

"The price structure today is in private hands; it will stay there if it is not abused, for private power passes to public hands only if its exercise results in wrongs for which the public insists upon a remedy."

Stassen Gives Address

Discussing labor peace and governmental cost, Gov. Stassen of Minnesota praised the operation and result of the labor relations law, patterned after statutes in Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

A plea for extension of the city manager form of government to every urban center came from President Clarence A. Dykstra of the University of Wisconsin.

Pump priming as a national financial policy was attacked by Lewis Douglas, principal and vice chancellor of McGill University, and president-elect of the Mutual Insurance Co.

Disadvantages Cited

Douglas, director of the budget in the early part of the Roosevelt Administration, said that Government spending for humanitarian purposes, however, questionable in the abstract, must be countenanced as a lesser evil than distress and starvation, but that in its later manifestations, when proposed as a means of increasing purchasing power during a depression and thus inducing a spiral of recovery, it had little justification.

Implicit in the latter theory, he said, were two highly technical and exceedingly delicate decisions: First, when in the business cycle should such expenditures be decreased, and second, by how much?

Such technical questions, he added, could scarcely be answered by a parliamentary body, and therefore the people must locate their control over the public purse strings by turning over the responsibility to some irresponsible body.

Moreover, the policy of spending for this purpose must be continued by increasing doses of public funds in an effort to maintain a rising or even stationary level of economic activity, he asserted.

helpless because I trusted fairness I do not get."

She told the Governor Dr. Saxe had taken away privileges she enjoyed under previous administrations, claiming she had been allowed to visit with her parents in the yard.

Mrs. McKinnell said she did not know where her daughter had gone, adding she was "awfully sorry" Mrs. Judd had escaped.

Mrs. Judd, who had remained away from a dance for inmates last night, was gone nearly 12 hours before she was missed.

Asked why hospital attendants were unaware of her absence so long, Gov. Jones remarked "it's a hospital, not a jail." There are no armed guards, he added.

He expressed the belief Mrs. Judd was not violent and "wouldn't hurt any one."

The sheriff's office asked all Mexican border stations to be on the alert.

The Judd trunk murder cases provided a sensation eight years ago. Mrs. Judd's companions, Agnes Ann Leroi and Hedvig Samuelson, were slain in a fit of jealousy, in a Phoenix apartment October 16, 1931. Two days later, after the dismembered bodies were discovered in Los Angeles in trunks which dripped blood, a widespread hunt was started for Mrs. Judd.

She twice was sentenced to be hanged but in 1933 was adjudged insane.

The British Press Association said the fourth ship, the 7,235-ton Clan Chisolm, was sunk, "presumably by a U-boat, while on a homeward voyage to Britain."

All were sunk in the same vicinity—about 60 miles west of the Strait of Gibraltar. Eighty-nine persons were reported dead or missing.

London newspapers, mindful of the heavy losses inflicted on British shipping in the World War by German surface raiders, asked the question: Have these warships, far more potent than submarines, slipped into Atlantic shipping lanes?

"Did the Deutschland capture the City of Flint?" one newspaper asked in commenting on the seizure of the United States vessel taken into the Russian port of Murmansk by a German prize crew.

News agency reports headed "British steamer (Stonegate) sunk by pocket battleship," were passed for publication.

Reports from Oslo, Norway, yesterday said the 5,044-ton freighter Stonegate had been sunk in mid-Atlantic by the Deutschland. Her crew and the crew of another sunken British ship—38 men in all—were rescued by the United States vessel City of Flint and landed at Tromsoe Norway, before the City of Flint was taken on to Murmansk.

An admiralty spokesman said merely that the British navy had not "sighted" the Deutschland.

"If she had been," he added, "she would not now be at large."

On the basis of known speed records and armament Britain has only three warships—the battle cruisers Repulse, Renown and Hood—fast enough and powerful enough to overtake and conquer Germany's pocket battleships.

Naval circles said, however, that two or three 8-inch-gun cruisers working together would be "quite capable" of dealing with the Deutschland.

Besides the Deutschland, Germany has two other pocket battleships, the Admiral Scheer and the Admiral Graf Spee.

First reports that an armed German raider was at large were heard as early as October 2 when the sinking of the 5,061-ton British steamer Clement off the coast of Brazil became known.

There was disagreement, however, among the survivors as to the identity of the attacking ship. The Admiral Scheer, the Schwabenland, a converted merchantman formerly used as a mid-ocean station for a commercial airline, and the German freighter Cap Norte, which the British admiralty said on October 12 had been captured, all were mentioned as the possible raider.

tual assistance pact at Ankara last Thursday. In the House of Commons, Prime Minister Chamberlain admitted to Maj. Clement Richard Attlee, leader of the opposition Labor Party, that it was usual for treaties to be laid aside in the House for 21 days before ratification but, "in view of the exceptional circumstances of the present case, it is desired that the Anglo-Turkish treaty should be ratified as soon as possible."

Chamberlain said the government would submit the treaty to King George VI for his signature "at once," and proposed to exchange the instruments of ratification at Ankara next week.

Ribbentrop Ignored

Copyright by New York Times.

London, Oct. 26.—In all the discussion of British diplomacy in the House of Commons yesterday—and there was considerable—there was not the slightest reference to last night's oration of German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop, described by one afternoon newspaper as "Bismarck the Little."

Instead the talk centered around the Turkish treaty, Italian neutrality and hopes of wooing Russian trade away from Germany.

The air ministry unostentatiously announced that bombers of the Royal Air Force last night flew over Berlin, Magdeburg and Hamburg. It was true they dropped no bombs but the fact of the presence of these planes all of which were said to have returned safely, served as a reminder that Great Britain as well as Germany is equipped to wreak havoc and destruction.

One of the most notable features of Von Ribbentrop's speech, as viewed here today unofficially, was the absence of any claim of powerful allies for Germany. Great Britain, on the other hand, through negotiation of its treaty with Turkey, has bound the "guardian of the Black Sea" to her and France and is in a better diplomatic situation now than when the war broke out, in the foreign office view.

Something of that idea, it was believed, was expressed this afternoon by Foreign Secretary Halifax, in an "off the record" talk to a committee of the Conservative members.

Without disclosing what the foreign minister had said, several declared that he had satisfied them that there was no cause to doubt an ultimate Allied victory.

R. A. Butler, undersecretary for foreign affairs, in the Commons disclosed that the possibility of following up the recent agreement for the exchange of rubber and tin for Russian timber "by further arrangements suitable to war conditions is now under examination."

Russo-British trade came up also in the Lords where the Earl of Tankerville raised the question of the effect on Finland and other Scandinavian countries "threatened by Russian aggression" and of the news that British rubber and tin were being supplied to the Soviet. Lord Tankerville wanted to know if British timber needs could not be supplied by Canada and the Scandinavian countries.

British Envoy Urges Unity of Democracies

Basic Cause of War Analyzed by Him as Ideological Conflict

Copyright by New York Times.

New York, Oct. 25.—The necessity of the collaboration of democracies in a world threatened by totalitarian war was stressed tonight by the Marquess of Lothian, Great Britain's Ambassador to the United States, in a speech at the Pilgrims annual dinner.

Lord Lothian began with the suggestion Britain has conducted no propaganda campaign in this country, because it felt self-formed opinion among an enlightened people was the basis for international amity.

Continuing, he asserted ideas of propaganda in a totalitarian state are different.

Don't Trust Citizens

"By the law of their own being," he said, "they do not entrust their final decisions on public policy to their own citizens. They set out to manage their thinking for them; as they think, in their own interest, through official control of the schools, the universities, the press, the radio and the movies."

"I have been told," Lord Lothian added, "that if I talk about so dangerous a subject as the war I shall be accused of propaganda. You are quite rightly suspicious of propaganda."

Great Britain, he explained, feels that it has the right "to explain to you and all other democracies what we are doing and why we are doing it." The judgment, he continued, "is your inalienable right—That is what we mean by saying the British government conducts no propaganda in this country."

"My country," he went on, "must certainly bear its share of blame. But, if we are to see the picture clearly, I think we must admit that no nation and no statesman can establish a clear alibi for what is now happening."

Hitler Challenging Democracies

Discounting the German versions of the present European war as being an outgrowth of the Treaty of Versailles, he said: "I would put it differently. Hitlerism is the child of bolshevism out of universal economic nationalism."

"What Herr Hitler is challenging at bottom," he said, "is not the frontiers made at Versailles but the whole democratic conception of international life."

"Repeatedly," he said, "I see it said that this is a mere contest for power between rival imperialisms. I think this is to misunderstand what is at stake. . . . The real issue in this war is whether there is going to be power behind the kind of world in which France and the British commonwealth and the democracies of Scandinavia believe, or far more relentless power behind the world in which national socialism and communism believe. That is the real conflict."

Britain Agrees To Speed Searches Of U. S. Vessels

London, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—Great Britain and the United States have reached a "gentlemen's agreement" to speed up movements of American merchant ships through the British contraband control, but United States shippers still are grumbling at the delays in control ports, it was disclosed today.

These delays have greatly increased the transport costs to the American shippers by heavy insurance charges and deterioration of cargoes.

Under the British-United States "gentlemen's agreement," copies of manifests of American ships going to the European war zone are airmailed to England when the ships leave their American ports.

The ministry of economic warfare thereby has time to study the items listed on the manifests before the ships arrive in England. Nevertheless, long delays still are reported.

Finland, Firm, Awaits Return Of Spokesmen

Helsinki, Oct. 25 (AP).—Determined to maintain complete independence and neutrality, Finland waited tonight for the return of her delegation from Moscow tomorrow, bearing new Russian proposals.

[Foreign Minister Erkko reiterated the government's determination to stand firm.

[The foreign minister revealed he had been in daily contact with the governments of other northern countries. Erkko described as unfounded a report Russia made three-point demands for no fortification of the Aaland Islands, concession of certain islands in the Gulf of Finland and a friendly policy by the Finnish government toward Russia.

Ex-WPA Worker Hopes 50 Isn't Too Old for Artist Career

John W. Clement, 50, wooing the muse in front of the finches' cage

With Kibitzers Galore, John Clement Was Discovered Painting Finches at Zoo; He Is Positive He Can Make Good

Easel-deep in kibitzers, amateur art critics and the just plain curious, John W. Clement painted birds at the zoo yesterdayfi hopeful that the age of 50 is not too ancient to begin carving an artist's career.

Clement, who lives at 804 A street northeast, is a former service man and a former WPA worker, but, first of all, he is a determined being who is positive he could make good as a painter of scientific, technical subjects if given a chance. Right now he has no regular job.

"That's why I've been coming here the past several days," he said, "to demonstrate what I can do. On WPA I was put to painting signs and houses. But I want to express the beauty of nature on canvas."

A reporter and photographer browsing through the birdhouse, came upon Clement at work in front of the finches' cage.

"I'm hardly ever without a crew of advisors," he said, laughing. "Some call me impressionistic. Some criticize and others praise. The best compliment I got was when one of the keepers said, on looking at a peacock I had painted, it looked so real he ought to feed it."

Clement is a self-taught painter, he said, except for five or six months instruction many years ago. Ill health has prevented him from doing heavy work.

"Besides, I want to make my living as a painter," he declared. "Not commercial slapstick, but good, useful things."

Premarital Health Examination Urged By Dr. Jacob Kotz

Compulsory premarital health examinations were indorsed by Dr. Jacob Kotz, gynecology professor at George Washington University, in a speech last night at the Jewish Community Center.

Dr. Kotz warned, however, that medical science is still too uncertain about the nature of hereditary disease to lay down hard and fast rules. He urged engaged couples to discuss frankly with each other any serious physical defects. He added there is no objection to marriage between blood cousins of healthy stock.

Dr. Kotz's address was first in a series on "Marriage and the Modern Family." Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld will discuss religious aspects Wednesday night.

Nazi Ship Watched By U. S. Gunboat

Mexico City, Oct. 25 (AP).—The United States gunboat Erie stood guard tonight over the German freighter Havelland in the harbor of Manzanillo on the Mexican Pacific Coast to insure she does not violate regulations of the American neutrality zone.

The Erie and United States planes from Panama were ordered to search for the Havelland last week when the freighter failed to appear at Panama. The planes located the Havelland at sea and radioed the Erie, which communicated with the Havelland by radio, but did not halt or search her.

Hinckley Praises Air Safety Mark

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—Air transport lines in the United States have flown a record of 50,000,000 miles in seven months without a single passenger fatality, Robert H. Hinckley, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, announced today.

Hinckley, keynoting a meeting of the Air Transport Association of America, gave credit to the airlines for their safety record, and added that the CAA could share the credit with "intense satisfaction."

Alcohol Deaths Down 50%; D. C.'s Next to Highest

The death rate from alcoholism has declined over 50 per cent in this country in the last 30 years, the Census Bureau reported yesterday. The report showed that Washington, next to Nevada, has the highest alcohol death rate in the United States.

In 1936 there were six deaths from alcoholism in the District out of every 100,000. The national average for the same year was 2.9. Nevada averaged about 19. The Maryland and Virginia rates were 2.9 and 3.1, respectively.

Although the bureau avoided any mention of prohibition or repeal, the report showed that the national death rate per 100,000 from alcoholism started rising in 1920, three years after prohibition, reached a peak in 1927 and 1928, then fell to about 2.5 in 1932, and has hovered about that figure ever since.

Italy, Greece Will Negotiate For Nonaggression

Athens, Oct. 25 (AP).—Italy and Greece have agreed to start negotiations in the near future on a pact of friendship and nonaggression, it was reported authoritatively tonight. The pact would replace the present treaty which expires this year.

Negotiations for a new accord were seen as following Italy's desire for a Balkan bloc under Rome's leadership to prevent Soviet expansion into southeastern Europe.

Istanbul reports said representatives of Turkey, Iran, Iraq and Afghanistan were conferring there [illegible] in a pact designed to block Soviet expansion through one of their countries.

Roosevelt Modifies Plan For Refugees

Gives Way to Allied Plea Victory Would Obviate Resettlement

To meet objections of the British and French governments, President Roosevelt has consented to a rephrasing of his proposal for a huge program to rehabilitate millions of refugees at the close of the present war, it was learned yesterday.

The modified proposal will be taken up at a meeting at the State Department today of the executive group of the Intergovernmental Committee for Refugees. The group is expected to issue a statement agreeing to the President's plan, with such modifications as it may approve.

Mr. Roosevelt's suggestion, it was learned, resulted in a fundamental clash of opinion with the British and French governments. The President had proposed that preparations begin at once to resettle in the earth's "vacant spaces" millions—possibly between 10,000,000 and 20,000,000—refugees who probably would be bereft of home and country by the present war.

Look for Repatriation

The British and French, it is understood, took exception to the idea that it would be necessary to relocate refugees—if there should be refugees in any such number—in foreign lands.

They contended that they fully expected to win the war, and, in that case, the refugees would again be domiciled in the countries from which they had been exiled.

Myron C. Taylor, former chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation and American vice chairman of the intergovernmental committee, it was learned, told the President of the British and French objections.

Gen. Rafael L. Trujillo, former President of the Dominican Republic, yesterday revealed plans for the admission by his country of 500 refugee families to start a colonization project for which arrangements have been made.

He expected these families to be admitted soon. They will be classed as settlers, he said, and will not be subject to the $500 per capita entry tax on immigrants.

"My government will receive these settlers with humanitarian feeling," he declared, "and will give them every opportunity for work.

Assumes Responsibility

"I will personally make myself responsible for the upkeep and education, for a period of two years, of a number of unmarried young men and girls who will come with those families."

The announcement was made at a luncheon at the Carlton Hotel attended by Trujillo, Paul Van Zeeland, former prime minister of Belgium and executive president of the Coordinating Foundation for the Relief of Refugees; Sir Herbert Emerson, director of the Intergovernmental Committee for Refugees; George Rublee, former director; James N. Rosenberg, representing resettlement organizations; Carlos Davila, former president of Chile; Dr. Isaiah Bowman, president of Johns Hopkins University; Andrew Pastoriza, Dominican minister; other officials of the Dominican Republic, leaders in the refugee movement, and officials of the State and Treasury Departments.

Pastoriza, in a letter to Rosenberg, revealed plans for the formation of a corporation to handle the colonization experiment. The Dominican government, he said, realizing the need for temporary housing, will allocate a piece of land for this purpose for a reasonable period.

It will aid the corporation, he said, in acquiring suitable farm lands on which the settlers, to be selected because of special fitness, will make their homes. The corporation, he explained, will be exempted from taxes.

Pastoriza emphasized that colonization would have to start on a "modest scale," and that further immigrants could be admitted only in "due time."

President Roosevelt's war refugee proposal was made at a White House luncheon last week to the executive group of the intergovernmental committee. He urged that comprehensive surveys be started at once in order that, when the war ended, plans for relocating refugees in foreign lands would be well under way.

Death Parts Pair Whose Love Won Wilson's Aid in 1918

Little Dutch Girl—a Widow Now—Wrote The President to Grant Her Soldier-Sweetheart Leave to Wed, 'Make Happy Then 2 Persons'

By the Associated Press

Asheville, N. C., Oct. 25.—Death today sundered a romance that once had Woodrow Wilson and the army's high command—no less—playing cupid, sweeping aside regulations, so a little Dutch girl with an eloquent pen and aching heart might marry the soldier she loved.

It started more than a quarter-century ago, when M. Francis Wielage, a young Dutch boy, kissed his sweetheart goodby, and started for America to make his fortune.

It ended today, when Dr. Wielage, become a noted dental authority, died and left his sorrowing widow with the poignant memories of the letter that 20 years before had made their marriage possible.

Here is her letter, written in 1919, that moved President Wilson, as commander in chief of the army, to instruct Gen. Pershing to drop the role of warchief and become Love's ally:

"President Wilson, Washington.

"Dear sir: Confiding in your well known humanity, I come to you a moment for asking your attention for an affair which is interesting me very much, hoping you can find among your many affairs a moment for reading my request. Therefore I'll be short.

"I am engaged to be maried to Capt. M. F. Wielagee, of the American Expeditionary Forces. He is, just as I am, Dutch by birth. Six years ago he started for America on his own risk to work for himself a way through the world. He has succeeded.

"After that he has made himself naturalized and started for France as a military dentist. For six years we didn't see one another, and now, now that nothing preventing our marriage any longer but a couple of frontiers, our dream menaces not to become a reality, for he can be sent back home in a few days to America without having been here in Holland.

"A leave of absence for a neutral country he cannot get. We can't travel to Le Havre. First the voyage is too expensive (my father is a village clergyman); in the second place, we can't get a passport, for they consider a wedding a pleasure. Therefore, I'll apply to you. You are overwhelmed with work, but if you can spare the time for it, make happy then two persons. We will be so very thankful for it. Two weeks leave of absence will do to consummate our marriage.

"Excuse my many faults and bad English, but I only learned it at school and never had occasion to speak it. Waiting for you in this affair, I remain with kind regard,

"Yours sincerely,

"A. BARTSTRA."

History now shows a letter on White House stationery was sent immediately to Gen. Pershing, and that in July, 1919, the young couple whose love not even war could stay, were married in her father's tiny Dutch parsonage, from which came the plea to Wilson.

Louisiana Capital Guarded on Rumor Of Coup by Leche

Baton Rouge, La., Oct. 25 (AP).—State troopers with submachine guns continued to guard Louisiana's skyscraper capitol tonight as rumors circulated that Gov. Earl K. Long feared his predecessor, former Gov. Richard W. Leche, planned a coup to resume the office he left last June.

Doubt was expressed at the time about the validity of Leche's resignation since State laws do not provide for such action. Long, then lieutenant governor, automatically succeeded to the governorship. Leche has since been indicted by Federal and State grand juries probing Louisiana political scandals.

A Distinguished Actor Returns to Hollywood

Charles Coburn Signed for Two Paramounts; Helen Hayes' Play Confounds 'Death Watch'; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

SUMMER now may be said to be officially over. Charles Coburn, one of the distinguished figures of both stage and screen, who directs the annual Mohawk Drama Festival at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., has returned to Hollywood for his third season in films.

The Mohawk Drama Festival has become an institution of international renown. So, to all intents and purposes, has Mr. Coburn as one of the ablest of the character actors contributing the wealth of their experience and talents to the aggrandizement of the cinema.

BELL

Mr. Coburn, immediately his obligations to the summer drama activities, which he founded at Union College, were fulfilled, was signed by Paramount for two pictures. The first, tentatively titled "The Road to Singapore," is a comedy designed for the costellar uses of Bing Crosby and Dorothy Lamour; the other, a picturization of "Triumph Over Pain," which, its sponsors believe, will prove one of the outstanding releases of the year. Shooting will begin on the Crosby vehicle at once. Filming of "Triumph Over Pain" has been held in abeyance, pending decision as to what actor will play the role of Dr. Morton. Both Gary Cooper and Fredric March have been sought for the role.

Regarding the latter picture, Mr. Coburn has gone on record as deeming it one of the most dramatic subjects, if not THE most dramatic, he ever has encountered and his part as the finest that has come to him, so far, before the cameras, although he will be called upon to assume the role of a villain.

Needless to say, Mr. Coburn overlooks no opportunity to promote the interests of the 1940 Mohawk Festival, of which he again will be in charge. This gratuitous task is gradually being made easier for him by associates in the West Coast studios. Frank Craven, last seen in Washington in "Our Town;" Sally Eilers and Frank McGlynn, who appeared in last summer's festival programs, all have become ardent missionaries for the enterprise at Union College—probably the most noteworthy undertaking of its kind in these United States.

To promote his interests in the cinema, Mr. Coburn needs no missionaries. The public attends to that.

It is slowly leaking out that New York's discriminating theatergoers look upon Helen Hayes' latest stage fable, "Ladies and Gentlemen"—seen here at the National a fortnight ago—as a worthier bit of entertainment than the Gotham critics declared it to be. "Ladies and Gentlemen" is something in excess of $100,000 to the good from its preliminary road tour and has played to standing-room audiences at every performance since it opened on Broadway. To one who was among an enthusiastic minority, this seems no more than the working of simple justice. Chief objection to the play seemed to be that it fell short of "Mary of Scotland" and "Victoria Regina" as a suitable vehicle for its star. It did not strike this column so. If Washington's Helen wishes to take a sabbatical year from the heavy demands of historical costume drama and have fun, it seems to me no more fair to forbid her that privilege than it would have been to prohibit Shaw's writing "Pygmalion" because he also wrote "Saint Joan." "Ladies and Gentlemen" was hailed here as nothing more than a zippy evening's entertainment. I still think that is what it is.

A practically simultaneous New York opening of the first two new productions of the Playwrights' Company for the season is in prospect as a result of the signing of the star-spangled George M. Cohan for the leading role in "Madam, Will You Walk," the new comedy by the late Sidney Howard, which in other respects has been ready for production for some time.

Rehearsals already are well under way and present plans call for the opening of "Madam, Will You Walk" in Baltimore the week of November 13. It comes to the National Theater in this city the following week and is scheduled to open in Manhattan November 7, when Paul Muni in Maxwell Anderson's "Key Largo," first of the Playwrights' season's offerings, also is due for its White Way—in a manner of speaking—premiere. "Madam, Will You Walk" was found to be a slightly too elaborate production for extensive touring, so a projected jaunt into the Midwest, prior to New York, has been abandoned.

Scrutiny of the itinerary laid out for the same company's road tour of Katharine Cornell, in S. N. Behrman's "No Time for Comedy," reveals that Washington will have to be patient until January 29 before it will have any opportunity to view Miss Cornell in the successor to her "Herod and Mariamne," which closed here last season before reaching New York. Raymond Massey in Robert E. Sherwood's "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" will skip the National Capital entirely on his present transcontinental junket. Since Washington saw the play before any other city did, that would seem to be fair enough. Let's not be piggish about these things.

If you have been searching around for somebody who works fast in the theater, take a squint at Max Gordon, producer of the Kern-Hammerstein musical comedy, "Very Warm for May," now at the National. When Mr. Gordon told us toodle-oo on his way to New York in the composing room at 2 o'clock Tuesday morning, his last words were, "I'll be back Thursday—see you then." So when I poked my nose into the National Tuesday night at the beginning of the second act, the first person I saw was Max Gordon.

No, he hadn't been kidding; no, he hadn't missed his train; no, he hadn't changed his mind. He had gone to New York on what is loosely referred to as Monday night and had hopped right back again Tuesday afternoon, bringing with him Hassard Short, one of the theater's outstanding experts in polishing such oversized charades as "Very Warm for May."

So from this point on, it will be Mr. Short—with a succession of musical successes longer than you have been in town to his credit—who will be in directorial charge of "Very Warm." That practically puts it in the bag, as the saying goes.

And speaking of the Kern-Hammerstein frolic, as many people are, the manner of programming the members of Mr. Ogdon Quiller's Progressive Playshop is a trifle hard to handle. The first names of the actual players are listed as their character names. If you don't know them all personally, you are as good as sunk. That is why I have been so long finding out that "Walter" is Walter Long, former Washingtonian and attache at one time, I believe, of the Capitol Theater, who has developed into one of the best of the tap dancers, and that "Carroll"—in whose case the general rule does not hold—is Hollace Shaw, with the most exquisite high soprano notes heard from a rostrum since Galli-Curci. Miss Shaw is a Californian, who once was soloist with Arturo Toscanini—that's how good she is.

Aside to "Constant Reader": All reviews of Monday night openings appear in the final edition of Tuesday morning's Post and are reprinted only in Wednesday's early editions. You evidently are getting the wrong edition of Tuesday papers. And thank you very much for the pretty posies.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Oct. 25.

In "Farmer's Daughter," Bill Thomas, himself a former vaudeville star lined up more than 30 name acts who used to headline in the heyday of variety, names like Bert (the Gatling Gun) Hanlon, Bill Demarest, Inez Courtney, Cy Jenks, Stuttering Tommy Dugan, Shaw and Lee, McKay and Ardine, (two Dizzy People), Al (the Black Laugh), Herman (who used a stooge in a box before Phil Baker "originated" the idea), Eddie Borden, Bill (Carolina Moon) Frawley and others. "With this bunch on the set" Bill mused, "it looked like a Monday afternoon backstage at the Palace. But they're real troupers. Even though some of them never faced a camera before; their timing, pointing, acting, is letter-perfect. [illegible] First time I saw Charles Winninger he was tooting a trombone with wife Blanche Ring singing: "I've got rings on my fingers, and bells on my toes." It was on Louise Dresser's front porch in Mount Vernon, N. Y. They've all gone a long way since then; and I'm sure you as well as I are glad to welcome them back into the fold. So it looks as though "Babes in Arms" has started a cycle—with vaudeville helping revive pictures. While many Broadway lay-offs became Hollywood extras, Hollywood names have gone back to rescue Broadway. Bert Lahr, Mary Martin, [illegible] Ethel Merman, Buddy Ebsen, Dixie Dunbar, Betty Grable, Betty Fields, you can keep on naming them far into the night!

HOPPER

Jack Benny's in trouble again. He's doing "Buck Benny Rides Again"—the joker is, he can't ride, doesn't like bucking, not even passing it, can't find a polar bear to play "Carmichael" and they may have to bleach one of our cinnamon variety. Edith Head refuses to design clothes for a bear. As far as she's concerned, they can just go around in their BEAR SKINS. Ouch!

The latest addition to Lya Lys glamour wardrobe was designed by Orry Kelly and consists of a pair of gold taffeta bloomers! . . . Humphrey Bogart wants it known that he doesn't raise double ruffled petunias. He hates gardening. Says he might go for fauna, but Flora is out . . . They're calling that fight sequence Lupe Velez and Linda Hayes staged for "Mexican Spitfire," "The Battle of the Century." The best part of it you'll never see on the screen.

Charlie Ruggles certainly carries that dog hobby into his personal life. Recommending a former employe, he wrote: "He's as loyal as an Airdale—and has just as many fleas."

One of our sweetest character actors is Russell C. Powell—another of the horde of old timers who once were up in the three bracket per day figures and who are now content to work at an extra's pittance. He's getting along in years and one by one he's passing on his prize possessions to those of us he likes. The other day, doing a bit in R. K. O.'s "That's Right, You're Wrong" he quietly approached Kay Kyser and offered him a gift. Kay studied it a moment and was startled. "Why this is the original and complete score of Victor Herbert. I want you to have it because I know you'll cherish and take [illegible] and there were none in the script to prompt him.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Oct. 25 (INS).—Betty Grable, Jackie Coogan's very blonde and pretty former wife, won't have to worry if the Cole Porter-Buddy De Sylvia play, "Dubarry Was a Lady" doesn't please the paying customers. Betty, you see, has a job waiting for her in Hollywood—and a very good one. Darryl Zanuck has signed her as a Twentieth Century - Fox star, effective as soon as "Dubarry Was a Lady" closes and he has made some very interesting plans for her.

LOUELLA PARSONS

She will step into light comedy roles—the same type that brought Alice Faye to stardom. Alice has now graduated to heavier dramatic roles. You needn't be surprised if the boy friend, Artie Shaw, also puts his name on the dotted line for the Grable pictures, for as we told you long before anyone else printed it, Betty will be Mrs. Shaw when she gets her final decree.

Several months ago we rumored that Arthur Wing Pinero's "Enchanted Cottage," which Richard Barthelmess and May McAvoy made in the silent days was being readied for Ginger Rogers. Now that rumor is a reality. After La Rogers finishes "The Primrose Path," she'll do a complete about-face and play the very sweet and quaint McAvoy role. Douglas Fairbanks, jr., will also forget sophistication, high comedy and all else in the Barthelmess role opposite her. I am wondering just how the 1939 audience will like this play, which is really a fantasy. I hope there are still those who will find this beautiful story pleasing, for we can't all be realists.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Joseph Schenck has rented the Gaylord Hauser mansion in Beverly Hills; Charlie Chaplin, one of the first to arrive at the Westwood Theater to see Paulette Goddard in "The Cat and the Canary;" the Pomona preview audience cheered for 5 minutes when Bill Powell appeared on the screen in the new "Thin Man," his first picture since his serious illness; Mrs. Jack Oakie is having two birthday parties. Tonight, her natal day, she entertained the Gene Markeys (Hedy Lamarr) Edwina Mandel and Eddie Sutherland. Saturday night she will really go to town in a big gala affair at the Beverly Wilshire; Reginald Gardiner's latest hearthrob is attractive Lya Lys; Walter Connolly has sent word to his pals in New York to get out the red carpet—he is on his way there for his first visit in four years; Eleanor Powell is nursing a bad toe which will keep her out of "Broadway Melody" for the rest of the week; Mickey Rooney, who went East on an Edison education, has wired his girl friends he arrives home tomorrow; Prince David Mdivani has received word that his sister, Mrs. Denis Doyle and her husband have arrived in New York. They will arrive in Hollywood next week to visit Rose Davies. He is the son of the late A. Conan Doyle.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

A New Film And a Revival At the Little

'Wedding of Palo' Unique Arctic Subject; Repeater Still Good

Besides reviving the simple and impressive "A Man To Remember," the Little Theater's new bill opening yesterday, offers an unusual and charming film of the Greenland Eskimos, "The Wedding of Palo."

This unique picture was produced, written and directed by the late Arctic explorer Knud Rasmussen, famous for his love for and work among the people of Greenland. Its story is simplicity itself, but its revelation of life far out of our ken, its steady attention to what we cliff-dwellers call "the essentials," and its revelation of customs and rites that are out of the ordinary, make it thoroughly absorbing.

In days of conflict and power there is one custom that stands out. That is when an Eskimo difference of opinion occurs and one or the other side must be proclaimed winner. Where a European would fight a duel, where the liberal would submit to arbitration, the Eskimo resorts to a competition of song and name-calling. But it is mostly name-calling and the best insulter wins. All of which would sound highly reasonable if the game were played to the rules of an Arctic Queensbury, but there is a mucker in the duo and to get the girl he stab his adversary in the chest.

Acted by Eskimos

In this land of barren wastelands the witch doctor mumbles for health, the children hail the arrival of the salmon-run, the summer home is wrapped up in a jiffy for a move to winter quarters and the brothers of the bride-to-be silently oppose her marriage because it will upset their hut-keeping arrangements.

It is acted, without much self-consciousness, by the true inhabitants of Greenland's icy mountains and English subtitles relieve the jolt even the multi-lingual must receive when they encounter the language of the Eskimo.

"A Man t oRemember" remains that beautifully integrated film which reviewers hailed when it made its first unsung appearance. Its moving tale of a country doctor and the memories which crop up about him on the day of his funeral also gained a remarkable word-of-mouth reputation for so unassuming a film at that time and a second view justifies it.

Edward Ellis, Anne Shirley, Lee Bowman and William Henry have the leads in a cast which owes much of its success to the understanding direction of Garson Kanin.

RICHARD L. COE.

Columbia

Producer Edward Small's picturization for United Artists of Alexandre Dumas' swashbuckling story of "The Man in the Iron Mask," an adventure-romance of the France of Louis IV, today opens its return F street engagement on the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater.

The picture revives the lusty daredevilry of D'Artagnan and Porthos, Aramis and Athos, the three musketeers, in an effort to solve the problems of love and state precipitated by the conniving that attended the disposition of the twin sons of King Louis XIII. One was elevated to the throne; the other hidden in an obscure village under the guardianship of D'Artagnan. Louis XIV grew up to be a sadistic king heaping persecution and brutal tortures upon his subjects. Philippe was his complete antithesis. When both fall in love with the Spanish princess, Maria Theresa, the foster conflicting policies of government, the way is clear for another demonstration that Dumas was unwittingly writing directly for the screen as well as for the printed page.

The pictured action is flamboyant and tumultuous and rather overshadows the purely romantic intervals of the story. It is interpreted with extraordinary gusto by a cast of splendid selection. Louis Hayward's dual portrayal of Louis XIV and Philippe brings him new luster as an actor who can achieve by characterization what most accomplish by extravagant makeup. Warren William is an admirable D'Artagnan and Walter Kingsford and Joseph Schildkraut finely drawn antagonists in the court of the king. Joan Bennett is a shade on the placid side, as Maria Theresa, but in the large view "The Man in the Iron Mask" is a production that reflects high credit upon all associated with it. Its scenes of horror are not too gruesome for mass consumption.

It is supplemented on the Columbia screen by the usual diversity of short subjects. N. B. B.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Oct. 25.

A FEW DAYS AGO Edward J. Reilly, presenting a different picture than that of the jaunty, colorful counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann, appeared before Justice Benjamin Brenner in the small-claims division of the Municipal Court . . . The man who once had been selected from among the foremost criminal lawyers in America to defend the former German machine-gunner accused of kidnaping the Lindbergh baby this time was asking the court to grant a $10 judgment . . . "I'll do more than that," the wise and humane Judge Brenner assured . . . "But can you?" asked the forgetful Reilly . . . "Yes, I'll make it $15," reminded the jurist. "That's the amount of your claim."

JIM NEARY resigned from the defense in the Fritz Kuhn case, despite the stipulation of a $5,000 fee. The offer was increased to $10,000—but Neary has spurned that too . . . Kerensky, baffled by the maze of international diplomacy, has retired to the Outpost Inn at Ridgefield to get away from it all . . . Maurice Malkin, who told the Dies Committee that Local 802 of the Musicians Union was dominated by the Reds, has written a letter to Jack Rosenberg, head of the union, retracting that statement, and apologizing for having said it. In addition, the witness said he had been misquoted.

MORE THAN A DECADE ago the newspapers front-paged a strange mystery of Manhattan—wherein a cloak-and-suit dealer on Seventh avenue was struck by an arrow which crashed through a plate glass window and then lodged in his shoulder . . . That mystery never was solved. Only two men knew the truth—the man who did it, and the one witness to the event . . . The witness, who promised never to reveal the story until the statute of limitations had run and the victim no longer could sue, was Harry Hershfield . . . the man who did it this week wrote to Hershfield and permitted him to tell the story. The arrow-slinger was Douglas Fairbanks. He did it, accidentally of course, while practicing for his role in "Robin Hood."

DORE SCHARY whose "Boys Town" won the Academy Award, has been recalled to Hollywood to start a one-year assignment with M.-G.-M. Schary's first picture under the new contract will be another "Broadway Melody" . . . Ciro's, the new swanky cafe, has eliminated its formal dress requirement. "We've discovered," the manager confided last night, "that so many people who don't dress are more important than those who do" . . . Charles Bedeaux, jr., hasn't been able to learn the whereabouts of his father who is in Europe . . . Alec Woollcott tells his friends that the Woollcott character in "The Man Who Came to Dinner" is the most enchanting, fascinating person he's ever seen.

ONLY A FEW YEARS ago three of "The Dead End Boys" lived in the slums of Manhattan, where cop-fighting was their favorite pastime, second only to the fun of hurling missiles at the well-dressed New Yorkers who sometimes visited the neighborhood . . . last week the "Dead End" kids broadcast with Kate Smith . . . When they left the C. B. S. Studios they were surrounded by so many youngsters—who tugged at their tailored suits and broke their glasses—that the police had to be summoned to escort them to their cars and to arrest two of the over-aggressive fans.

LUTHER ADLER was busy rehearsing with the Group Theater on the day his baby was born. The Group, which permits no telephone interruptions, nevertheless allowed Sylvia Sidney to apprise her husband of the impending event. She didn't want to upset him—and so said: "Come home, Luther—and take me dancing" . . . The British censors refuse to permit birth announcement postcards, showing a stork delivering a baby, to be sent to foreign countries. The ruling is: "The ban applies to every kind of card which bears a pictorial illustration" . . . All the British leaflets dropped over Germany include the one phrase: "This Might Have Been a Bomb."

AFTER THE FIRST performance of Clare Boothe's "Margin for Error" in Princeton, Sam Levene, who portrays the New York cop in that show, went to the Nassau Inn and sat at a table near Albert Einstein . . . "I just asked Einstein about you," an intermediary told Levene. "He says he couldn't understand you" . . . "Einstein, with that formula business," Levene replied. "Go back and tell him I don't understand him, either."

'The Show Off' Opens Season Of the Pierce Hall Players

The Pierce Hall Players observed their tenth anniversary last evening with a performance of George Kelly's celebrated comedy, "The Show-Off," in Pierce Hall, at Fifteenth and Harvard streets, where the play will be repeated tonight.

The audience had a grand time, for, like all the other groups in our city, the Pierce Hall Players have an especial audience which knows what to expect, especially in the matter of pacing. The company, even though it might not have an exciting play, invariably zips it off with real dash and last night was no exception.

What's more, Mr. Kelly's comedy is still amusing. In fact, we had quite forgotten how funny it really is, even though the auto and radio businesses have grown a bit further out of hand since 1924.

Best of all, there is the perplexed and talkative Mrs. Fisher, so concerned with utter minutiae. The more inconsequential the matter, the more Mrs. Fisher's tongue laps it up. Her chatter was in the steady grasp of Carolyn Rogers last night and Miss Rogers was a source of high amusement, being particularly so in the first act, when too much trouble had not fallen on her bothered brow.

The show-off himself was played by Robert Truitt Miller, a young man whose completely annoying attitude showed that he knew what he was about. He is, you recall, another voluble soul whose chief glee comes from incessant chatter about himself, the suburbs of Philadelphia and his distaste for the—railroad. Forever getting into trouble, he is continually helped from one slough after another by his wife's family which, for a large part of the time, ignore quite unconsciously the fact that love is what makes the world go round.

One sidelight of the play provided added amusement for its audience. Traffic troubles and jay-walking are worries as common as a cold in Washington and when such ponderable subjects are treated in a play directed by traffic-expert Howard Wentworth, the allusions have an added slyness.

Mr. Wentworth's direction was generally smooth and rapid, particularly in the first two acts, when he was not so hampered by the extraneous material of the third. Elinor Evans was brittle and smartly gowned, as the understanding sister, and Ellen Scholze was an assured Amy. Gene Murphy, George H. Sandefer, Arthur W. Sammeth, Carl Pribek and Sidney Bassler completed the cast. R. L. C.

Recently scoring in a supporting part in "One Hour to Live," Roper has been cast in the Johnny Mack Brown western, "The Galloping Kid," filming at the same studio.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN

Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills. Adv.

Drug Cures 8 Of 17 Cases of Meningitis

Sulfapyridine Used By Three Doctors on Baltimore Patients

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 25.—Announcement that sulfapyridine cured 8 of 17 persons suffering from pneumococcic meningitis—a disease heretofore almost always fatal—was made today in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The high recovery rate—47 per cent—gives assurance that physicians for the first time have a definitely effective treatment for the ailment, which causes inflammation of a membrane of the spinal cord and brain.

The successful cases contrasted sharply with a mortality rate of 100 per cent in 29 victims who did not receive the new drug because they had the disease before this treatment was developed.

Three Baltimore physicians, Horace L. Hodes, Harry S. Gimbel and George W. Burnett, had the success with sulfapyridine, or its sodium salt, in the largest test of the drug reported for this disease. Only 14 other treatments with sulfapyridine—resulting in eight recoveries—had been announced previously.

Sulfapyridine, a derivative of sulfanilamide, was proven effective also in pneumonia and several other bacteria infections. Sulfanilamide itself proved of little value in pneumococcic meningitis, however, the doctors reporting only one recovery in 17 patients receiving it.

Power Engineers Volunteer Service

E. G. Moan, of Lorton, Va., national coordinator, national coordination committee of power engineers, has left at the White House a pledge of the Nation's power engineers for service in times of national emergency.

"We are now getting our house in order, so that if any emergency should arise we want to be able to advise our President that the power engineers of the Nation are fully prepared to cope with any situation with reference to the generation and transmission of power, for which we are eminently qualified to do."

Montgomery Tests Drugs

According to Dr. V. L. Ellicott, health officer for Montgomery County, Md., the sulfapyridine treatment for lobar pneumonia is under preparation. Health department nurses will visit patients, make certain tests and observations regarding their tolerance of the drug and report to the attending physicians, Dr. Ellicott stated.

Carol Builds Up Religion In Rumania, Says Visitor

Rev. Danila Pascu, General Secretary Of Baptist Young People's Union, Tells About Distribution of Low-Cost Bibles

By Robert Tate Allan.

King Carol is rapidly becoming one of the strongest religious forces in Europe—having already effected the distribution of almost one million Bibles in Rumania—according to the Rev. Danila Pascu, general secretary of the Rumanian Baptist Young People's Union.

REV. PASCU

Now in Washington for a brief stay as guest of the District of Columbia Baptist Convention, at whose headquarters he was interviewed yesterday, the youthful leader arrived in this country several months ago as delegate to the Baptist World Alliance Convention, and will remain until next spring to familiarize himself with American religious work.

The Rev. Mr. Pascu was emphatic in his praise of the "fine religious spirit" of King Carol. He said the King was the driving force behind the lifting of the decree which closed 1,602 Baptist churches in that country.

Through King Carol's efforts, it was pointed out, a Bucharest bookshop was established to serve as a distributing center for Bibles, which are being sold at one-half the usual price, or about 50 cents in American money. The government pays any necessary postage.

The monarch's vision has placed Rumania behind him almost to the man, declared the clergyman, describing how a chamber of agriculture has been put into operation, through which farmers, representing 79 per cent of the population, are able to buy equipment at half price.

"Nazlism and other movements which threatened to gain control have been swept out, and the people are convinced that King Carol has followed a healthy political and economic path," he commented.

What Is Needed

The new wage-hour administrator, Col. Philip B. Fleming, once served as graduate manager of athletics for the Army. In this capacity he had to refuse demands for free seats at Army football games and soothe disappointed applicants for choice locations. It is suggested, therefore, that this early training in the art of combining soft answers with the ability to say and mean "No," should be most useful to the colonel in his new position.

To be successful the wage-hour administrator certainly needs to exercise diplomacy in handling employers and employes affected by the fair labor standards act. The efficient administration of this kind of regulatory legislation depends to a large extent upon securing the cooperation of industry and labor.

The extraordinarily difficult position occupied by Col. Fleming calls for still other qualities, however, in addition to skill and fairness in dealing with men. It requires sound judgment in the selection of representative individuals to serve on industry committees and recommend wage schedules. And it also calls for a real grasp of the economic adjustments made necessary by the introduction of new schedules of wages and hours. In other words, to the personal qualifications that make for a good administrator must be added the mental equipment that makes for wise decisions.

Mr. Dies Explains

In seeking to justify publication by his committee of the local membership and mailing list of the American League for Peace and Democracy, Chairman Dies was careful to state that "the committee is not charging that the Government employes affiliated with the league are members of the Communist Party." He added: "There is no evidence to this effect."

It is good to have Congressman Dies' disclaimer of any intent to pin the Communist label on all of the 563 Federal and District employes whose names are on the published list. It is certainly no crime, in this democracy, for a citizen to belong to any organization which does not contravene the law. It is neither a crime nor a misdemeanor for any Government employe to join such an organization. Nor is there any disgrace in being openly identified with it.

There is much to be said in favor of having continuously available to the public the membership lists as well as the financial backing of all organizations that espouse a particular political, economic or social philosophy, be they conservative or radical. At least one State—New York—already has a rule of that kind on its statute books. Only those organizations which have something to hide, which to survive must operate behind a carefully guarded cloak of secrecy, have anything to fear from such publicity. The others cannot be harmed by it.

It is one thing, however, to have such publicity applicable to all organizations. It is quite another to single out, as the Dies committee has done in the case of the local branch of the American League for Peace and Democracy, a particular organization for special action along those lines.

What was the purpose? Evidently it was not to provide a Who's Who of Communists in the Government service. Such a list, if authentic, would be a valuable public document, and Mr. Dies at one time threatened to publish one. But the present list is, by his own admission, something else again.

If the local branch of the American League for Peace and Democracy includes, as one must now assume that it does, individuals of varying or no particular political faith, why focus on it at this time the spotlight of publicity?

An answer to this question is perhaps to be found in the rest of Chairman Dies' statement accompanying the published list of Government employes on the rolls of the organization.

In that statement, the Texas Congressman indicates that the intent of publication was punitive. Nine months ago, he says, his committee adopted a report in which the American League for Peace and Democracy was branded as a Communist front organization. Yet the Government employes affiliated with it did not, as a result of this report, resign. Having ignored the committee's warning, they are now to be punished by having their affiliation with an allegedly Red organization exposed.

Under the circumstances it is difficult not to agree with Congressman Dempsey that the primary purpose of publishing the list is to "smear" a number of Government employes who, using their own judgment of the nature and purposes of the league, refused to quit it as a result of the committee's ukase.

For all of its valuable labors, this action indicates that the committee has not yet got over that habit of irresponsibility which has marked its conduct from the first.

The Debate Reviewed

Five weeks ago today President Roosevelt asked Congress, assembled in extraordinary session, for amendment of the existing neutrality law. During the intervening period the subject has been debated from many angles in the Senate, to say nothing of its discussion in less important forums in every American community. To the arguments which have been given such full expression little or nothing remains to be added. The final vote which is now approaching in the Upper House is overdue.

On both sides there have been some outstanding speeches during the Senate debate. It has served to clarify a number of points on which there has been much public confusion. But on the whole the discussion, in retrospect, seems disappointing. That is because it has been unnecessarily protracted.

From the outset it was apparent that no fundamental issue divides the two camps. Both sides are above all insistent upon securing the peace of the United States. Both sides are anxious to formulate a policy that will meet all the requirements of traditional neutrality. Both sides are willing to sacrifice unquestionable national rights in order to strengthen insurance against American involvement in the present war.

For that reason the division of opinion has revolved around matters of procedure rather than of principle. It is not the propriety but the practical desirability of the suggested revisions which has been at issue.

Probably the most important of the issues thus clarified is the desirability of the existing embargo on the shipment of arms to belligerents. Since neutrality in international law has always envisaged such shipments, this issue has been examined from the viewpoint of whether a proper policy is also a wise policy. The Senate has in effect concluded that it is wise as well as wholly proper for us to let Great Britain and France purchase munitions in this country, provided the supplies are paid for in cash and transported in foreign ships.

From this decision, soon to be confirmed by vote, few will differ. Indeed, considering the overwhelming hostility of Americans to the philosophy underlying the present German government, no other verdict could be regarded as possible. Opponents of embargo repeal have throughout been in the invidious position of seeming to favor a government which repudiates every principle for which America stands. That is why there has been so little heart in most of the speeches directed against embargo repeal.

The opponents of embargo repeal, however, have had one seemingly reasonable argument which has provided the second issue of consequence in the Senate debate. There are some who feel that while the arms embargo should never have been written into the law, it is nevertheless there and cannot be changed, during the course of hostilities, without taking an unneutral action. This is perhaps the most forceful argument advanced by those who argue that the embargo should be retained. None the less, it has been unable to stand up under scrutiny.

As the discussion has brought out, belligerents continuously change their policies in wartime. To say that a neutral cannot do the same, as long as measures taken apply to all belligerents, is to say that the rights of those at peace are determined wholly by the interests of those at war. Such an attitude accords neither with international law nor with traditional American policies.

The third real issue which has commanded practical attention in the Senate debate is the desirability of the sweeping restrictions on American shipping which were at first projected. To an increasing extent, as the debate proceeded, it has been made clear that many of these restraints would seriously damage our merchant marine without in any way serving as safeguards against war. So there has been revision here based on the reasonable argument that every surrender of a neutral right must be balanced by some positive advantage in behalf of peace.

National thinking on the subject of neutrality has been raised to a more intelligent level by the Senate debate. Even the time devoted to speeches which contributed nothing was not wholly wasted. But there is certainly no point in further reiteration of well-worn arguments when the measure gets to the House.

There are many members of that body who are at least as expert on the subject as the Senate has shown itself to be. For that very reason they should be the more anxious to avoid further repetitious oration, and to press for the final vote which a patient Administration has the right to expect at the earliest possible moment.

A Perennial Evil

Secretary Perkins estimates that at least a half million additional workers have found employment in the Nation's factories during the past two months. Substantial gains in employment are also reported in retail trade, mining and transportation. Such inroads upon unemployment are very encouraging. But it would be a serious error to assume that the current improvement in industrial activity is alone capable of eliminating the greatest weakness of capitalist civilization.

Col. Harrington, the WPA Administrator, recently stated that the relief rolls had been reduced by 1,300,000 persons since last January. He noted, however, that few of those dropped succeeded in finding jobs in private industry. As a matter of fact, the WPA cuts during the months of July and August alone were in excess of the estimated number of factory workers taken on in the last three months. WPA officials report, moreover, that the number of eligible persons on WPA waiting lists is now the longest in the history of the organization.

Even allowing for possible exaggeration of the numbers of the unemployed—placed by Col. Harrington not long ago at 10,000,000, including WPA workers—it is evident that the current business upturn will not provide jobs for more than a fraction of those in search of work. In view of the high and rapidly rising level of industrial activity, it is most important to understand the reasons for this employment lag. Otherwise, the unemployment problem can never be dealt with effectively.

Various factors are responsible for restrictions upon employment, notably the progressive mechanization of industry which has increased productive output per man and cut down the need for men. Also, when industry begins to expand, after a period of depression, men on part time employment work longer hours and labor more intensively. Again the result is larger output per man employed. Account also has to be taken of the 600,000 or so young persons who annually enter the labor market. As a result a constant increase in the volume of employment is essential to prevent a steady growth of unemployment.

The magnitude of the unemployment evil is probably not as great as at first sight appears. As times improve, and heads of families are more fully employed, many former dependents, forced by need into the labor market, tend to withdraw. Close scrutiny, moreover, will undoubtedly show that among the so-called unemployed are a very large number who should be classified as unemployable.

After a decade of depression we are still guessing at the total volume of unemployment and discussing the problem as if it were chiefly a matter of providing more jobs in existing industrial plants. Very little analysis is required to show that we have not one but many unemployment problems. They can be solved only by a constant expansion of industrial activity, providing new and diversified occupations for work seekers.

Overworked Hill-Billies

Just as a rose is a rose, a hill-billy used to be a hill-billy. But the New Deal has changed all that. The hill-billy has become a cultural asset and thus a pawn in the great game of world politics. His sphere of action is no longer confined to the mountains of West Virginia and Kentucky, but takes in the White House and the Department of State as well.

When the United States took stock of what she had to offer in this business of courting other nations and being courted in turn, she could reckon on such indigenous products as chicken, Southern style; the Empire State Building, Shirley Temple, and hill-billies. The first three all do well as authentic Americana. But hill-billies and their music are coming right along as a hallmark of our special culture.

First there was the performance at the White House for the King and Queen of England. And now comes Dr. Carlton Sprague Smith, chief of the music division of the New York Public Library, who urges the members of the Conference on Inter-American Relations in the field of music to consider hill-billy songs along with the spirituals and patriotic numbers in planning programs of musical exchange. So it looks as if the hill-billy is headed for South America.

Now, a certain amount of hi yippee ye is fine. But an overdose may produce a dangerous reaction here at home if not abroad. It may start a resettlement movement for the hill-billies—back to the hills.

End of 'Squads Right'

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

Frederick the Great's outstanding contribution to military science, the squad system, has been cast into limbo by the American Army.

In Frederick's day, the arrangement of soldiers in squads and propelling of them at the enemy, like so many catapults at a wall, was successful. The machine gun ended all that.

Veterans of the World War will not be sorry to hear that the old command of "Squads right!" will not echo again across rusty drill grounds, nor the call of "Port arms!" weary a new generation of rifletoters.

Anti-Trust Case

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Commenting on the denial by the Supreme Court of the United States of its petition to entertain the anti-trust case against the doctors, the Department of Justice states that "the court has only adhered to precedent in refusing to take jurisdiction under such circumstances except when cases involving similar questions are already pending before the court or when some outstanding constitutional issue is presented." Quite so. Then why was the petition ever presented?

Manifestly the department either gave little heed to the rule, or else sadly misjudged what the rule covered. A ludicrous bungle in either case. The department further announced that the appeal would now forthwith go through the United States Court of Appeals, thence to the Supreme Court, if the Court of Appeals sustained the lower court.

The department may win in the end, but it is a safe bet that to do so it will need to exercise a deal more legal acumen than it has displayed heretofore in the case. The haste to counter the shock of Justice Proctor's opinion by an ill-considered petition to the Supreme Court smacks of the silly "back to the Constitution" remark of Solicitor General Jackson a short while ago. The Department of Justice needs to temper its zeal with better legal discernment or become the laughing stock of the profession—or should I say trade?

Referred Below?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The remarkable utterances of that pastor of St. James Episcopal Church at Hyde Park, N. Y., who prayed last Sunday not for peace, nor for righteousness, but that the King of England "may vanquish and overcome all his enemies," reminds me of a discussion recently heard in an American home.

The question arose, "I wonder what the Almighty does about all of the conflicting appeals addressed to Him in times of war—God save the King from one side of an imaginary geographical line and Gott strafe England from the other—etc. How can He satisfactorily respond to all of these contradictory pleas?"

A woman's voice offered what is probably the right answer.

"I suppose He just refers all prayers of that nature to the Other Department!" T. H. R.

Immigration Figures

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his letter of October 14 Mr. A. B. Sutherland takes issue with Mr. Westbrook Pegler's assertions concerning English immigration to the United States. According to Mr. Sutherland, the figures for the fifteenth decennial census, taken in 1930, showed that the total foreign white stock in the United States in 1930 numbered 38,727,593. Of this number, aserts Mr. Sutherland, 10,778,385 came from Great Britain. To arrive at this alleged total for Great Britain Mr. Sutherland added the following figures: England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland and Canada.

Since, however, Great Britain consists of England, Scotland and Wales, the correct total for immigration from Great Britain is 3,658,519. The total for English immigration, the subject of Mr. Pegler's column, is 2,522,261. While the 3,337,345 who came here from Canada undoubtedly included many English, as well as Scottish and Welsh, we must remember that the Canadian total also included French, Irish and other non-British elements.

'Rational' Approach

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has become apparent to me, after reading the letters to the editor in your paper for the past few months, that United States citizens are highly opinionated in spite of their exceedingly small amount of knowledge. They also tend to base their opinions emotionally rather than rationally. As I, too, have very little knowledge, my only chance of reaching a valued opinion lies in a rational approach.

This type of approach seems to me to be very essential in our solution of problems arising from the European conflict. It is impossible to think with factions and reach a constructive conclusion. We should repeal the embargo, but not because doing so would help those whom we favor. We should repeal with the plan of legislating toward a greater neutrality, prohibiting favoritism to either side.

If such action were taken, the repealists would then become the isolationists and Congress could reach a constructive accord on neutrality theory. Why such cannot be done lies not in the rightness or the wrongness of either cause, but rather in the inability of Americans to see that imperialism fighting imperialism could not foster a rightful cause.

In showing that there are two sides to every question, let us stress the wrongness of England in the present European conflict. It is not that she is merely wrong, because the real basis here lies in the native greed of all men. It is not, however, an entire misconstruction to say that England's imperialism is the father of Nazi imperialism.

Did not she actually finance and promote the Reich (1) to kill communistic thought and (2) to improve her own imperialistic state? Logically, is a father's slaying of his bastard son (no one can say it was legitimate) a righteous cause because the son, in inheriting the exact traits of his father, grew too big for him?

Instead of continuing with my opinions of specific situations, which I may do if this makes publication, I would rather conclude with the thought that the salvation of the United States lies in the education of the public mind to think rationally.

Meanwhile, let us have this one concrete lesson for today: Read, if you wish, the emotionalist Dorothy Thompson, and columns of others, but laugh at them if you do. Seek rather the sage advice of our Senators from Idaho and North Dakota and the approach of our intrepid Lindbergh. JOHN FOSTER.

Proposes Edict

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The solution of the European stalemate, where belligerents cry war, and there is no war, is a joint edict by Russia and the United States, ordering peace.

No belligerent could afford to disobey. Everybody's face would be saved.

The primary difficulty is to get us to join with Russia, even to make peace. That must be overcome, in view of the alternative.

An armistice should be declared to begin with, of course, and a conference; with neither of the world's greatest two powers obligated to apply military pressure except jointly. THOMAS McMORROW.

Peace Plan

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There has been a lot of publicity in American newspapers lately about proposals of private individuals in belligerent nations for "organizing the peace," but very little about such proposals right here at home. Why should imported ideas along this line be given preference over news arising in our own country?

In case your readers are interested in American news of international significance, I would like to mention a proposal for peaceful world organization along the lines of the American form of government which is now pending before the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. Introduced by Congressman Jerry Voorhis, of California, and entitled "House Concurrent Resolution 27," it reads as follows:

"Whereas the people of all nations, overburdened by heavy debt for armies and armaments, and nevertheless in ever-present danger of war, look for leadership to bring order out of the confusion of international affairs; and

"Whereas international order cannot be peacefully established otherwise than by an appeal for world co-operation addressed to all nations; and

"Whereas our own national existence at peace in a democratic federation of sovereign States provides a well-tried pattern for successful federation and fits the United States of America to take a bold initiative in offering the federal system to all nations; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States hereby be memorialized to take, without delay, the necessary steps to prepare a plan for the calling of a world convention which shall draw up a constitution for an all-inclusive, democratic, nonmilitary federation of nations."

Rather than slip into passive admiration of the "pie in the sky" type of peace design which requires the complete destruction of one side in the conflict first, why not emphasize proposals for world organization on the American plan and use them as an incentive for the immediate cessation of hostilities?

Anyone interested in helping the Voorhis resolution should get in touch with William B. Lloyd, jr., 455 Birch street, Winnetka, Ill.

"Really, Tovarich!"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Employing a technique used in Stalinist circles for a decade, Martin Chancey attempts to assure his following that Owen, Gerber and Goodykoontz, who recently announced their resignation from the Communist Party through this column, are merely members of one of "the various Trotskyite groups."

More than that, Chancey reports "a considerable growth in membership and increased branch attendance" since the recent Soviet-German pact. Any reports to the contrary, he continues, are "fake and phony."

Really, Tovarich! How much longer do you believe you can continue to pull the wool over the eyes of American workers? Betrayal is still betrayal and frenzied shrieks of "Trotskyism" will not cover it up forever.

A check upon our membership and upon others whom Chancey might term "Trotskyites" reveals no one who is acquainted with any of the three former Communist Party members although we would like to establish some contact with them. RAE SAUNDERS,

The Post Impressionist

Gentleman Panhandler

Even the most fastidious of the Plymouth Club's habitues will tell you that Sport was a gentleman as well as a panhandler.

He was dirty; had spent a lifetime in the bars of a small midwestern town, consorted only with drinking companions, was always mooching, and yet definitely was a gentleman.

These qualities were evident in a certain dignity and solemnity of mien, that derived from inherited, not acquired, breeding. He had the ponderous manner of a retired clubman who has just been invited to speak a few words in the interests of a Great Cause.

It is no exaggeration to say that Sport succumbed from a stroke of good fortune. He had won $26 during the chain letter craze, and unthinking friends gave him his first bath and tied a pink ribbon around his neck. The bath was fatal. On a summer day Sport caught pneumonia and died.

Sport had those deep, pleading brown eyes that are found only in Hollywood's glamour girls and spaniels. They were his chief stock in trade. The convivial drinker who could eat a ham sandwich under Sport's beseeching gaze and not share half of it could gorge himself on roast turkey before all the starving children of Spain. If the casual diner was hard to crack, Sport could cry like Lillian Gish. Big tears would pour down each side of his muzzle and splash among the cigar butts and burnt matches on the floor. Like Miss Gish, he still looked beautiful, even as he cried.

Such a talented canine naturally was very fat and a bit asthmatic. From the rear he looked like a baboon. So much sitting up to beg had worn all the fur off his hindquarters. Yet you forgot all this under the spell of Sport's eyes. I've heard some men swear that the dog had the power of a Svengali. I remember once coming out from under the influence of Sport's hypnotic gaze (or was it the four bottles of porter?) to find that I had bought four liverwurst sandwiches and fed every last crumb to my spaniel friend.

The stranger in the Plymouth Club was a sucker for Sport, and let me say here that Sport had Barnum's motto seared into his brain from puppyhood. The only break the stranger got was when the heat of the pot-bellied stove made Sport too drowsy to eat. On such occasions he would flop down back of the coal bucket, oblivious of such remarks as "God, how that dog stinks!"

Perhaps the newcomer would ask, "Goldie, why don't you get rid of "that damned hound?" (Goldie was the genial Irish proprietor. He was called Goldie because his heart was of gold.)

And Goldie would smile and quip, "Can't, pal, we mop up with him on Saturday night."

This was a two-edged jest. No one ever believed that the Plymouth Club was mopped. And, of course, Sport stayed. He was as much a part of the club as the dirty wall paper that hung in strips, the pictures of Jack Dempsey and Jake Kilrain that were cut from a magazine and pasted above an old racing form on the south wall, the obscene doggerel scrawled in the toilet. Goldie knew that Sport belonged there because the Plymouth Club was a man's drinking place, no perfumed, chromium plated drink place where sophisticated blondes dawdle over Tom Collinses and fill the air with Chanel No. 5. The club somehow managed to recall the old-time saloon with its sawdusted floor, free lunch and nickel beers. Sport made this atmosphere authentic. The patrons, many of them the town's "best citizens"—bankers, lawyers, industrialists—liked it. It recalled "the good old days."

Others (not listed as the town's "best citizens")—laborers, truck drivers, the unemployed—liked the club because they could play rummy and "wire works euchre" (the card-slapping kind) and swear like drunken stevedores on a Shanghai toot. They liked Sport, too, marveled at anyone who could distinguish his smell from the other smells of the club, and fed him generously as he waddled amiably from table to table.

On a sample tour Sport's menu might run something like this: One half cheese on rye sandwich (nice doggy), three squares o. Hershey bar, half bottle of Pepsi-Cola, piece of celery (sit up, boy) two olives, peanut butter sandwich, bite of baked ham (good dog!) half bowl of oyster soup, three pretzels, bit of hard boiled egg (atta pooch!), pickled beet.

If there was anything Sport wouldn't eat, it wasn't in the animal or vegetable kingdom. Only the cans and bottles went to the incinerator. Mealtime was from 8 a. m. to 12, 12 to 6 and 6 to 12.

On my vacation this summer I trekked back to Indiana and visited the Plymouth Club. To one of the Old Familiar Faces I said:

"Say, do you remember Sport?"

"Yeah . . . good dog . . . he died many beers ago."

"Too bad about that bath, wasn't it?" I prompted. "It must have lowered his resistance."

"Resistance, hell," the Familiar Face snorted. "It was the sheer indignity of it . . . broke his heart."

But all that was—as he said—many beers ago.

Fair Enough

Wide Open Reno

THERE SEEM to be two stories in Reno, one about the wide open, legal gambling and the divorce industry, the other about Nevada's humane attitude toward soulless corporations and the rich. This is the one about gambling and divorce.

The gambling is indubitably open, legal and one of the principal occupations of a great many locals and casuals. However, any vice which is cheap tends to demoralize itself and in Reno there is a roulette wheel for which one-cent chips are sold and most of the bets on all the games, with the exception of faro and craps, are in amounts of a quarter or less.

The standard limit in roulette is $5 on a number, but this is reached only when some high-roller happens along from the outside. But the vast bulk of the gambling, and it is vast only in bulk and over a long period, is pathetic in its scrawny poverty by comparison with the hell-roaring extravagance of the old buccaneers, of Virginia City, in the golden days, and even by comparison with the more modest recklessness of the small miners then and later.

Reno Gambling For Small Change

EVEN MONTE CARLO, in the day of the three-cent franc, with only one joint and evening dress required, outgambled all Reno today.

Hundreds of slot machines line the walls and stand back-to-back in solid rows in the dumps and lurk in the corners of stores and restaurants, usually near the cash register, so as to suggest an idea to the customer who has just received some change. But those built for quarters receive little action, while the nickel and dime machines grind in the small money of a clientele composed for the most part of gamblers who are by no stretch of the imagination Park avenue scions and scionesses or Hollywood stars. They seem closer to the WPA.

In the keno rooms where cards are two for a dime, and in the big department stores of the gambling business which offer everything, including the paddle-wheel, ladies of the most reserved type and plainly not of the divorcing set are as much at home as the dealers who get $15 a day and enjoy full respectability under the law.

Illegality Thrill Is Not Present

IN NEVADA gambling, properly licensed and provided the tools are honest, is as respectable as preaching and a stickman is on even terms, legally, with the Governor himself. Therefore, an elderly lady with her children grown up and gone away and with a dollar in hand is no more out of place spotting nickels on the corners of a layout or peering at the numbers on a pair of keno cards than she would be scuffling around in the chain grocery, squeezing melons and complaining of the price of neck-bones for stew.

That business about the children being grown up and away is just something out of my sentimental imagination. For all I know, she may be an old-time, professional hoyden with a record as long as a rubber mile. You can't go up and ask old ladies if they are respectable.

From the way this is developing I feel justified in predicting that I won't get around to the divorce story today, but will make that one No. 2 and the tax thing No. 3.

It is snobbish to say that a one-cent bet by a person who is gaited that way economically is less glamorous than a $100 or $1,000 bet, or name any figure you like, by a rich man or woman, but that is the way it is. Dime bets are tawdry, too, for the same reason that people all around the country lap up subsidized publicity, disguised as news, about rich and silly night-crawlers in the expensive saloons of New York but don't care at all about the outings and brawls of factory people in Joe's Grill, except as police news.

Petty Amusement Unrelated To Vice

IN RENO the city collected $59,452 and the country $48,142 in license fees from gambling devices in the year ended last June 30, at a flat rate per table, machine or whatnot, and without regard for the total amount of money gambled through them. I don't want to say that this unknown aggregate was mostly little money, because a fancy man who is being kept by a rich woman, in or out of wedlock, may send in thousands of dollars in a few hours and bend the ratio out of shape. But the grind is not maintained by the pretty people. It is supported by the town types of both sexes, from 9 o'clock of a Monday morning, to my certain knowledge, to long, long beyond 12 of a Saturday night. And something which I thoroughly understand, now that I am an old settler, 48 hours in Reno, boy and man, is our casual acceptance of all this gambling as petty amusement and commerce, unrelated to vice.

It startles a stranger at first. Then he doesn't give it much of a thought. I hear it is the same way in those South Sea places where the ladies go around so nonchalantly.

Senate to Ban Belligerents' Use of U. S. Flag on Ships

dential review, as a concurrent resolution requires no signature by the President.

As the Senate neared a vote on the bill's basic provision embargo repeal—calls went to out-of-town House members to be at the Capitol by Monday. Speaker Bankhead said no House action is contemplated before that time, regardless of whether the Senate passes the measure today or tomorrow. A 2-to-1 Senate majority for repeal appeared assured.

3 Courses Are Open

Administration House canvassers for repeal reported continued gains, but rested on claims of an "absolute minimum" of 30 votes, with hopes higher. Actual House precedure has not been determined, but leaders have promised "reasonable time for debate." They must choose from three possible courses—a vote to concur in the Senate amendments, action to send the bill to conference, or throwing the Senate bill open to House amendments.

Opposition amendments awaiting Senate action today include a proposal to bar any use of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund to support Allied credits or aid belligerent purchases in this country.

As a prelude to this controversy, Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, turned over to the Senate a reply from Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to inquiries on use of the fund.

Morgenthau said that since the war began the fund has been used in no operations to support foreign currencies.

"If there is a war in any country, before we would use the stabilization fund or any money in the Treasury to assist any country in prosecuting that war, I would come up before the proper committee and ask for guidance," said Morgenthau.

Congress Yields, He Says

Senator Johnson, of Colorado, in seeking to strike from the bill any White House discretion in the President's power to declare the existence of a foreign state of war, said the President, by failure to act, could render all neutrality bill provisions "inoperative." He called it a "complete surrender by Congress to the Executive of the whole foreign policy of the United States."

Senator Connally and other sponsors of the bill, replied that unless discretion was given the President, drastic provisions of the bill would have to be invoked in the case "of every inconsequential little war," regardless of whether American interests were affected.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, opposed Congressional authority to determine that a state of war exists. Borah said there would be hopeless conflict if the President concluded there was no state of war and Congress determined there was one.

La Follette Fights Boom

"It is not good legislation to place that responsibility on the legislative branch of Government," said Borah. "Either it ought to be placed on Congress and the President jointly, or on the Executive alone."

In his unsuccessful effort to limit war-time exports to belligerents through an "Export Control Board," Senator La Follette (Republican), of Wisconsin, contended war trade and the "war boom" not only influenced America's entry into the last war, but "distorted and dislocated American economy to such a point that at the end of ten years, we are still struggling with the economic problems which were thus created."

Not to act now to prevent a repetition of the last war boom and collapse, La Follette told the Senate, "is to invite disaster in the United States not only from an economic standpoint but from a political standpoint, using that word in the broader sense." He said democracy "cannot indefinitely survive" millions of unemployed and millions of dollars in idle plants and capital.

Revised War Referendum

La Follette introduced a variation on the Ludlow war referendum amendment, which he seeks to attach to the bill. The La Follette plan calls for a national "advisory" election before a declaration of war involving sending of American troops overseas. The result of the referendum would not be binding on Congress, and no war election would be held in the case of a threatened or actual attack on the United States.

Stabilization Fund Idle

In his letter to Secretary Morgenthau regarding use of the stabilization fund, Senator Vandenberg had asked whether there was any existing stabilization agreement with England, France or any other country.

"I have only a day-to-day agreement with England, France, Holland, Switzerland and Belgium to deal on their orders for their account, not our account, with settlements at the end of each day," he quoted Morgenthau as having told him over the phone.

"There have been no such transactions since the war started."

Referring to a question by Vandenberg as to whether the purchase of foreign gold should not be curtailed and repriced for the period of the war, Morgenthau wrote:

"Any substantial change in the price of gold which is known to be temporary would have seriously disrupting influences on trade and international capital flows. It would introduce a still greater risk element in business relations with foreign countries and would, moreover, increase world speculation in dollar exchange."

Expects Less Gold

"You may be asking whether the recent depreciation of foreign currencies will of itself lead to an increased inflow of gold (into the United States). If this is the sense of your question, the answer is probably no. . . .

"The specific effect of the recent depreciations of foreign currencies, . . . would clearly seem to operate in the direction of a reduction in gold offerings.

"The war well may have the effect of causing a wider distribution of gold among the countries of the world . . . these considerations as well as others indicate that gold will emerge from this disturbed period with added prestige as the international medium of exchange."

Repeal Foes Stalemated

By Mark Sullivan

Fail To Gain Strength

WHEN REPEAL of the existing neutrality law (including the arms embargo) was first proposed by President Roosevelt, in the regular session of Congress last summer, the Senate opponents of repeal held an informal meeting. It was in the office of an early isolationist veteran of the 1920 fight against joining the League of Nations, Senator Hiram Johnson, of California.

While no formal counting of noses was made, and no commitments were made by those who attended, it was estimated that about 34 out of the 96 Senators were present. This was, of course, not enough to defeat the President's proposal. But the old out-of-Europe leaders, such as Senators Johnson and Borah, remembered that in the beginning of their fight against the League of Nations 19 years ago, their numbers had been similarly small. They were confident their 1920 experience would be repeated—that by debate, radio addresses and other forms of stirring up public interest, the isolationist sentiment of the country would be increased to where it would have a majority in the Senate.

From that meeting in Senator Johnson's office on July 7, a statement was given out that "we are unalterably opposed to repeal of the present neutrality law . . ." That statement, that meeting of anti-repeal Senators, amounted to winning the first battle. For it was largely as a consequence of that incident that the fight for the President's measure was abandoned, and the regular session of Congress ended without action.

Repeal Foes Fail To Gain Strength

LATER, about mid-September, after President Roosevelt called the special session of Congress, but before the session began, another consultation was held, by leaders of the Senators opposed to the President's measure. This time they counted noses. Their estimate was that they would have, to start with, about 29 out of the 96 Senators. Their estimated 29 consisted of about 18 out of the 23 Republicans, about 8 out of the 69 Democrats, and the 3 third-party Senators from the Northwest.

There have now been 22 days of Senate debate—debate, be it said, of a high order. As the Senate moved near to decision, it seemed apparent that the anti-repeal strength had not materially increased; it was still in the neighborhood of a third of the Senate. Widespread discussion, enlightenment of the public to a degree as near universal as is possible to attain, did not change public opinion as reflected by the Senate.

Yet, as often, the losers did not lose all. The very fact of their opposition, and their threat, caused the Administration to ask a measure narrower than it otherwise would have. Washington gossip says the Administration would have liked to depart a long way from the whole idea of achieving neutrality by putting limitations on ourselves—would have liked to go back to practically the basis of international law. (With this, some thoughtful persons agree.) But Washington gossip says that when this was suggested the President was told that the Senate would not do it. Opposition to going back to international law was based in part on the fact that it would give the President greater discretion, the same discretion President Wilson and other Presidents have had.

House Victory To Be Narrower

ALSO, in the course of the debate, the Administration Senators trimmed the measure down still further, making concessions to the isolationist position in order to win the main point of removing the embargo on arms.

The measure, as shaped in the Senate, will go to the House. There, Administration victory is expected, though much narrower than in the Senate. In the House, as in the Senate, Republicans oppose the President's measure in such large proportion as to constitute practically a party position—although the Republican organization has refrained from taking a formal stand. Whatever bearing this may have on national politics will appear later.

The House's action will come more speedily than the Senate's. House rules permit limitation of debate. Besides, the measure, in much the same form, was already debated in the House at much length in the regular session last summer.

Out of the incident as a whole, as important as any in our national history, the country is entitled to feel that all's well. Not that the problems presented by this war are solved—far from it. It is quite possible we may find the new neutrality measure seriously inadequate. But the country has met with poise the problems presented by outbreak of war.

AS FOR THE SENATE, it was at fault last summer when President Roosevelt, anticipating war, asked for a new neutrality measure. It was not necessary that the Senate give the President what he asked. But it was most desirable that the Senate should act, should function, which the Senate at that time failed to do. However, when the Senate got around to action, it functioned in a debate long enough to be thorough, yet not so long as to give rise to mutterings about filibuster. The only parliamentary body in the world permitting such freedom of debate has so conducted itself as not to give rise to suggestions about limiting debate.

Prompt and efficient functioning of democratic government is of supreme importance when the fundamental question facing us and the world is the preservation of democratic government in a world in which for 20 years dictatorship has pushed democracy backward.

Today And Tomorrow

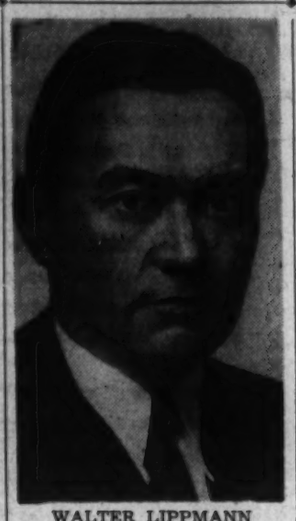
Solidarity Of Neutral Nations Seen As Foundation For Peace

WE CAN JUST, I think, begin to see dimly a possible answer to the hardest question of the war. The question is how peace can be made in view of the fact that the Allies are convinced that they cannot negotiate with Hitlerite Germany whereas the German nation is not likely to risk an internal revolution as long as Germany is besieged. There would seem here to be a contradiction which can be resolved only by a titanic struggle.

Yet there are many signs to indicate that an infinitely more civilized solution may be possible, given only a sufficient understanding of the real situation, the vision to see the opportunity, and a steady, resolute will to make the most of it. I venture to submit that while there is no sign whatever that peace could now safely be concluded between Nazi Germany on the one hand, Great Britain and France on the other, there are signs that a process of world pacification is under way and that there is beginning to be built a structure of peace within which the war itself may eventually be liquidated.



WALTER LIPPMANN

War Preceded By Phoney Peace

IT IS BEING said that this is a phoney war, but we shall understand the war better if we remember that it was preceded by eight years of phoney peace. From the Japanese invasion of Manchuria in 1931 until the Nazi invasion of Poland in 1939 the peace of the world was disintegrating under the demoralization of class war, the pressure of subversive propaganda and intrigue, and the intimidation of armed and ruthless conspirators. Though there was no war on the Western Front between the revolutionary imperialism of Hitler and the conservative imperialism of Great Britain and France, a struggle that was the moral equivalent of war was being fought on a dozen fronts in Europe and Asia, and to some degree even in this hemisphere.

The phoney peace was in fact a war, or more exactly a campaign of aggression, in which the smaller, weaker, neutral states were to be captured in order to found great new empires that would then be able to dictate a new order of things throughout the world. But at long last this campaign encountered effective resistance, and that resistance is what the superficial are pleased to call a phoney war.

Expanding Circle Of Neutral Nations

AS A MATTER of fact it is a very efficient war in that it shows great promise of being able to stop precisely that evil which it is designed to stop. Until the spring and summer of this year one country after another was being drawn into the orbit of the chief war-maker in Berlin, and forced to become his tool or his accomplice in the next phase of his campaign of conquest. Thus Vienna fell, and Prague was untenable. Prague fell, and Warsaw was untenable. Had Warsaw been surrendered without resistance, Hungary, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey would have been untenable; and then, heaven alone knows, what mischief Italy would have been coerced and tempted into trying in the Mediterranean, not to speak of Japan in the Pacific.

The proof that the resistance is effective is not to be measured by the spectacular incidents of the naval war or by square miles captured on the Western Front. It is to be measured by the increasing independence and the gradually crystallizing neutrality of nations that until a few weeks ago hardly dared to call their souls their own. Around the war which is localized on the sea and land frontier between Germany and the Allies, there is growing, like healthy tissue around a festering wound, an expanding circle of free, and cohering neutrals. Large areas of the world which were destined to become the battlefields of a gigantic war are being pacified by these nations which, since they can no longer be intimidated, are able to organize for the defense of peace.

Foundation Built For War Liquidation

THIS IS, I believe, the foundation on which the war can in the end safely be liquidated. The foundation is not yet fully laid; the structure is not yet built. But the design, the cornerstone, and the materials are there, in the Scandinavian nations with whom the American nations have declared their solidarity; in the formation of a Balkan bloc which will become a great reality if Italy and Turkey can come to that understanding which both these nations desire and need; in the promotion of a peace in the Far East, a thing to be desired for its own sake, and of the greatest importance for its effect on Europe as restraining Russia and encouraging still further the neutrality of Italy.

As the neutral world becomes self-conscious, organized, and aware of its mission, we may, I think, dare to believe that it can provide that framework of security and good will in which the Allied nations and the German nation could find the essential conditions of a negotiated peace. For the making of peace would be only incidentally a matter of drawing some frontiers in eastern Europe; primarily it would be a matter of Germany's entering and becoming part, once more, of a large community of nations already at peace. The German nation would not be surrendering its regime to its enemies but would be altering its regime in order to be able to participate in the going concern of an already peaceful world. And the Allies would find in that community of neutrals far more genuine guaranties of security than they can possibly hope to find by any kind of territorial or strategic or political pledge that they can exact from Germany.

Bolshevist Threat To Be Throttled

HERE, TOO, we may venture to hope, is the way the world can deal with the nightmare beyond the nightmare, the threat of bolshevist infiltration into a devastated Europe. If the neutrals, and here our own responsibility is crucial, will make available the arms that would make it impossible to initiate a great war in the west, would allow the defending nations to possess such power that a great Nazi offensive is ruled out, then western Europe will not be devastated, and there will be no serious danger of a great bolshevist advance.

But if the flower of the German, French and British youth must perish because an offensive seems a reasonably good gamble; if the industrial areas of western Germany, of northern France and of England must be wrecked because Hitler thinks his superiority in the air might give him victory; if the quiet war that is almost without hatred must become a blood-feud; if Germany, Britain and France must use up their last reserves, then no one can say what madness and what barbarity will rise from their misery as the survivors wander desperately among the ruins of their cities.

Trust Inquiry Hears Oil Chief, Turns to Insurance

The monopoly committee was told by William S. Farish president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, today that more "stability of purpose and adherence to principle" on the part of government would contribute to business recovery.

His testimony ended a study of several weeks during which spokesmen for the industry discussed problems of production, transportation, refining and marketing and were cross-examined by the committee. Today the committee will reopen for two or three days its investigation of insurance.

Belgium Hopes To Buy More in U. S., Theunis Says

By the Associated Press

George Theunis, former Belgian premier now on an economic mission to this country, indicated after a conference with President Roosevelt yesterday that Belgium was interested in increasing purchases, particularly foodstuffs, from the United States.

Asserting that his neutral country "must have raw materials," Theunis said that "we feel the pinch of the British blockade."

The demand for foodstuffs comes first, he said, and cotton also is needed. He gave the President a letter from King Leopold, of the Belgians.

The Once Over

Grocery Vitamins

The vitamin has arrived. Definitely. It will now be sold in grocery stores. The National Food Distributors Association has so announced in Chicago.

Quick to the market
For crullers and tea,
Pickles, a floor mop—
And vitamin B!

Out to the grocer's
And, please, right away
For catsup, some turnips—
And vitamin A!

Up to now the druggist has been the Big Vitamin A, B, C and D Man. You could no more get a bottle of vitamin tablets at the butcher's than you could get a pork chop at the apothecary shop.

But this vitamin business, starting like the little acorn (vitamin K), has grown into a mighty oak (vitamin H and J), and flourished like the green bay tree (vitamin L, M and N). There's gold in them thar pills.

The couuntry has become vitamin conscious. We used to order "vittles" by the pound or dozen. Now we order 'em by the vitamin.

"If vitamins are found in foods, why shouldn't they be sold with foodstuffs?" the grocers asked. But they were a long time getting the answer. Now the National Food Distributors Association has taken up the cudgels (vitamins W and Z) and announced that no longer will the druggists get all the cream (vitamins A to L).

Up on the shelf with the canned peas, mustard, breakfast foods and cornstarch you will soon find the vitamin bottles. You will presently be going to the market for a soup bone, a pound of lard and 50 vitamin B tablets.

The grocer's boy will be a routine figure as he delivers a broom, a mousetrap, a dozen lemons, some meat for the dog and some vitamins for mommer.

It is even possible that the grocer may begin giving health talks. He may take your pulse as he grinds the hamburger, and put a stethoscope to your chest between filling Mrs. Murphy's order for corned beef and quoting Mrs. Tilson a price on pickled tripe.

If you don't feel good, see your grocer!

But chaos is ahead. The whole business of grub and medicine is getting too involved. You soon may be taking a prescription to the market for a gargle, going to the drugstore for your potatoes and phoning the doctor to complain that your groceries are late.

How It's Made Easy for Hard of Hearing

Aid to the hard of hearing, 1940 style. Miss Eugenia M. Norman, wearing the latest vacuum tube "ear," shows how it works in a telephone conversation. The phone receiver is held against a microphone, concealed under the dress, and the sound is amplified and carried by wires to tiny ear plug

A large number of elderly folks who are slightly deaf had themselves a time yesterday inspecting a chamber of hearing horrors exhibited by the Washington Society for the Hard of Hearing.

The collection of devices, whose purpose is to show how far man has come in his effort to overcome defective hearing, includes a huge shovel-like horn with a tube a yard long, a headpiece resembling a pair of horns and numerous other antiquated contraptions, some 40 years old.

It was annual open house yesterday at headquarters of the society, 1116 Vermont avenue northwest, and from early forenoon until long past dark, the hard of hearing came in to inspect the latest in ear attachments, comparing them with the comical looking contrivances of a half-century ago.

Miss Elsie Phelps is not being coquettish, but demonstrating an old-time bone-conductor hearing device. The sound strikes the "fan," which is held between the user's teeth. This gadget was much in evidence years ago

"WELL, I DECLARE!" exclaimed one visitor, a woman about 70, who wore one of the up-to-date bone-conduction instruments which, except for a tiny plug in one ear, is invisible.

"See this ear horn?" She picked up one of the curios, a horn with an unusually large "mouth." "I haven't seen one like this since a neighbor of mine, many years ago, left her house one day to buy some milk from the door-to-door dairyman.

"A strange man was on the route that day. This was when you brought out your own container and the vender filled it up. Yes, you guessed what happened. The substitute driver, not recognizing the hard-of-hearing woman and her ear horn, poured about a quart of milk down the hatch."

MISS ELIZABETH BRAND, executive secretary of the society, thinks it's just grand the way better and better aids are being developed.

"But there are still altogether too many people with poor hearing who do not know about these improvements," she said. "And others who are sensitive about wearing appliances. Yet no one is self-conscious about wearing glasses. In time, mark my word, that attitude will disappear."

The Washington Society for the Hard of Hearing, which sponsors lip-reading classes, lectures, clinics, recreational activities and other services for the afflicted, is on the Community Chest's "go and see" visiting schedule today from 3 to 6 p. m.

Native Pair, Unique Team Of Designers

Barnes and Celestine Understand Clothing Needs of Women Here

The Post Fashion Editor.

Marshall Adams

A UNIQUE designing team has recently been formed to the flattery of Washington and Alexandria women. It combines the talents of an imaginative young man, Gene Barnes and an adroit young woman, Celestine, both of whom have the background and ability to produce dinner gowns, sports suits and whole town ensembles of distinction. Being natives of these parts, they understand the clothes needs of active debs and their mothers, and so tune their designing to the Washington scene and season.

There's nothing so novel about a couple of clever young people working their fingers and wits together to turn out outstanding designs, but when both of them achieve close harmony, yet maintain their own identities, it becomes an unusual set-up. Celestine, a vivid, handsomely gowned young woman, hung up her own dressmaking shingle two years ago in Alexandria after study at New York's Traphagen Design School and Pratt Institute. She and her partner, Gene Barnes, a casual, tweedy young man, who has studied art at the Corcoran Institute, have individual approaches to new clients.

Masculine Approach

Celestine, purely feminine, thinks in dress innuendos, in terms of subtle drapery which she, as an observant woman, knows will attract both men and women. Mr. Barnes has the masculine approach of thinking in terms of color, fabric, contrast and liveliness in detail.

Gene's first move is to glamorize a feminine client. "As men are attracted first by a becoming color on a woman," he says, he submits one fabric after another for exactly the right color or combination. For instance, Gene ascribes vivid Robin Hood greens and reds in coat and dress ensembles for the very young person whose flawless skin and figure are not harshened by sharp contrast.

The designer's sister, a brunette, inspires many of the gay and impudent things he has done for the younger Washington set. Scotch plaid is a favorite of his for the blithe single girls, and he has worked out witty new cummerbunds with secret pockets and coin-purse belts for his clannish plaid ensembles. Suedes in brilliant colorings, used as weskits or collars, are another Barnes formula for creating youthful dash. In fact, Gene's recent summer vacation abroad found him bringing home all the Irish tweeds and Scotch heathers and woolens he could lay his hands on for the woman he instinctively knows so well—"the young in heart."

Complete New Contour

Although Mr. Barnes is apt at creating "best dressed" designs for various types of women, the suggestiveness of the sleek black crepe is usually the product of Celestine's brain child. She thinks, as does the Frenchwoman, in terms of the basic dress and relishes the opportunity of working up a complete new contour or cut or bit of sculpture for a plain little black dress.

"How can I give her timeless chic in this one good black dress?" seems to be the one question Celestine asks when confronted with a new personality. Subduing certain age or figure limitations through complimentary lines, softly draped necklines, sculptured bodices and gentle fullness at the derriere are all decoys employed by Celestine always in a seemingly new manner.

For the Young in Heart

Peculiarly adapted to the tastes of the young social set are the designing talents of Gene Barnes, a rising couturier from Alexandria, now affiliated with Celestine, also a sage young designer who elects to deal with the subtleties of more worldly styles. Gene Barnes' sister, Joanne, a dark-haired little subdeb, was the inspiration for Gene's original sketch and design, reproduced above. For her vivid slimness, Gene employed white silk velvet for the gathered skirt with horizontal stripes of black velvet for the bodice and a great back streamered bow

Mary Haworth's Mail

Ready to Marry and Courted by Many Desirable Men, Girl Is Unable to Fall in Love; Why?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 26 years old, completed only two years of high school course, and worked for nine years (having a varied and hectic career) before I went to business school at night. Now I am doing secretarial work. Despite my lack of formal schooling, I am fortunate in that most of my friends are better educated, so that I have been able, with their assistance, to cultivate a certain natural taste for books and music.

During all these years of associating with the public, I have met a great many men of all shapes, types and characters. But I have never succeeded in falling permanently in love with any of them—and this is what distresses me. I have known boys whom I liked and admired and respected; but none whom I could sincerely want to be my husband and the father of my children. That sounds rather dramatic but I am really sincere, and use the hackneyed phrase advisedly. I am not searching for the pluperfect Adonis with lots of money and a generous disposition, but just for some man whom I could stand to see—and who could stand to see me—practically every day for the remainder of our lives.

The immediate problem is this: For the past year or so, I have been seeing a young man who is completing graduate work at a local university. He is a thoroughly nice person, admirable in that he has worked his way through college and graduate school; and is likable, intelligent and not unattractive. He loves and wants to marry me, and I am in a state of utter confusion about my feelings or lack of them.

This is only one of several similar situations and I am beginning to feel a horrible doubt of my own capacity for real and lasting love of any man. I am close to and loyal to my family and friends, but in each of these cases—where the young man seemed desirable from every point of view—I have sat there unable to do anything about it. One hears so much about unsuccessful marriages that I am afraid to enter into this utterly personal relationship without love, and yet I should certainly hate to go on and on like this. Consideration for the other person (quite as much as self interest) makes me hesitate to attempt a marriage based on such laudable but impersonalized grounds as respect, congeniality, etc.

I have been given to understand by my family and friends—and not too delicately in some cases—that all this is a little strange. I guess they are getting almost as tired as I am, of seeing boys come and go and nothing ever coming of it. And now that this newest situation has arisen, it seems more baffling than ever. I have even considered the possibility that perhaps I am in love with this young man and don't know it; and that the feeling of revulsion at any slight physical manifestation on his part is simply some sort of psychological reaction to a subconscious desire not to surrender after all these years. I know it is not due to frigidity, as I am naturally affectionate and rather demonstrative. Possibly you may be able to unravel what is to me a very real and distressing tangle of emotions. Sincerely yours,

M. M.

Symptoms Suggest Emotional Frigidity

DEAR M. M.: In the second paragraph of your foregoing letter, you say that you "have never succeeded in falling permanently in love with any (man)," —and that word "permanently" may supply the key which decodes the mystery of your supposedly unreadable emotional condition. To say that you are unable to fall in love permanently is to imply that you do find it possible to fall in love transiently.

And if you have been transiently in love, only to execute an about-face the moment the man gets serious; or to be revolted the minute he shows "physical manifestations" of loverlike interest, then in all probability there is a pronounced psychological twist underlying your chronic inability to accept any man wholeheartedly in the role of husband and father of your children. This psychological twist would have to do with emotional frigidity, so-called, whether or not you are willing to admit the possibility and correct the condition.

Because you can be casually affectionate and are "rather demonstrative," it is self-deluding to suppose that this constitutes absolute proof that you are not emotionally frigid. As a matter of fact, the more vitally ardent the essential temperament, the more composed and reserved it is likely to appear on the surface—in very self defense and as a matter of deliberate emotional economy. An individual may be powerfully inhibited, on the other hand, and yet have become sufficiently "socialized," so far as external department is concerned, as to be—or seem to be—both "affectionate and demonstrative,"—but only up to the point where his camouflaged neurosis is challenged. When that point is reached, he becomes either limply unfeeling or definitely defensive.

It is scarcely possible for the emotionally inhibited (or frigid; or psychically impotent) person to know when he is within hailing distance of love. All persons of the opposite sex will seem more or less alike to him, until he has recovered full use of his emotional faculties and is protected and served by an overtone of emotional awareness or sensitivity, which tells him which natures are akin to his and which are fundamentally alien.

However, to return to your immediate problem, involving your latest beau. You are not at all in love with him, nor is it likely you would ever be. Since your attitude toward men is not so extreme as to be called prudish (else you would scarcely have had a series of suitors), the fact that you experience "a feeling of revulsion at any slightest physical manifestation (of him)," tells plainly, even sharply, that he is not the man for you.

I would never advise you to marry him. Nor should you marry any man until you are able to make a positive rational and emotional choice—and that will be when you have freed yourself from whatever unwholesome inhibitions are currently obstructing both your intellectual and emotional processes. I suggest you discuss your problem with a psychologist or psychiatrist, if you would locate the cause and discover the cure of your "distressingly tangled emotions." M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Reducers Advised to Go on Food Spree Occasionally to Aid Hunger, Disposition

AFTER YOU have been on a diet for just so long, you would gladly trade your chances of a slim figure for one good meal. You are as determined as ever to go through with it, but you can't help feeling sorry for yourself.

It seems as if life is made up of calories. You could count them instead of sheep to get to sleep. The bakery shop windows draw you like magnet and as you stand gazing at the delectable carbohydates, all chock full of calories, you find yourself muttering rebelliously that bread is the staff of life. Friends and family irritate you beyond words when they tactlessly take generous second helpings—and your role of a martyr irritates them to words!

The cure for all that is to have the good meal you are wanting. The longing for food is like homesickness. A visit home usually dispels the nostalgia. It works the same way with the food you are used to having. You can regain equanimity by going on a regular calorie spree.

Make Special Occasion

Make it a special occasion and have all the trimmings. Order steak, potatoes, vegetables and a salad mixed with French dressing. Then go back and put a sizeable gob of butter on the potatoes. Take cream and sugar with the coffee and wind up with your favorite dessert—if you have room for it.

If you are subject to those attacks of caloritis it might be well to plan a spree like this once a month. By sticking closely to your diet all the rest of the time, the monthly departure won't interfere seriously with your weight loss and it may make a world of difference in your morale.

As you go along reducing, you will notice a change in your ideas of a "good meal." Your stomach is shrinking on the lessened food intake. Whereas you used to be able to stoke up on 1,000 calories at a meal, you will find that you are almost too well fed on 800.

Reducing, however, should not be a period during which you merely exist in anticipation of the time you go off your diet. Don't be too severe with yourself, while dieting. Most of the things you think make a meal worth while are the high calorie foods or trimmings and you may be able to juggle the calories to include some of them.

If you cut down elsewhere, you can have the usual amount of cream and sugar in your coffee. The same goes for French dressing—it only counts 65 calories per tablespoon. You can have a pat of butter for each meal, two for dinner if you like! But keep the size of the pats down to one-fourth of an inch thick, and have the butter soft so it will spread further.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Oct. 25.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—When a venerable and distinguished and beloved figure disappears from the life of a town, even one as enormous as this, the feeling is wide and deep. New York won't seem the same to many an old-timer now that Mgr. Lavelle, the rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral, has gone to his reward. For over 50 years he was rector of that big midtown cathedral parish, and his sturdy little figure and his twinkling blue eye was known to many thousands, including hordes not of his particular faith. He was a grand old man. He loved his church, his country, his city and his fellow man, and the old town is infinitely poorer for his passing.

Who should turn up among us but Ganna Walska! Remember? The dashing woman who wanted to be an opera singer, but couldn't, but who did succeed in marrying four men, two of them millionaires. Walska's another refugee from Europe's boom-boom. Now she'll dig along on Park avenue, somehow.

Lady Broderick Widely Feted on Visit Here

Widow of Former British Embassy Attache To Stay Until After Thanksgiving; Daughter Is Entertained by Miss Nancy Glover

By Hope Ridings Miller,

IN TOWN FOR an extended stay, Lady Broderick, whose late husband was with the British Embassy here, is being widely feted. Scores of Washingtonians who remember her when her husband was on the embassy staff from 1915 to 1930, have called on her and entertained her since she arrived here some time ago to visit the J. Maurice Brodericks, in Green Acres, Maryland.

According to present plans she will be around these parts until after Thanksgiving, when she and her daughter, Miss Sheila Broderick, will leave for Aiken, S. C., to visit Lady Broderick's sister, Mrs. A. M. Tabor.

Miss Broderick, who made her debut in Dublin last season, was born here and has a number of Washington buds among her acquaintances. rumors that she will make her bow in Washington seem unfounded (in fact, she definitely says she won't), but since she has many friends among the deb crowd she will be very much in partying pictures from now until the latter part of November, when she and her mother leave for the South.

Among the parties Miss Briderick has attended recently was the luncheon given yesterday by Miss Nancy Glover, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glover, jr., who entertained a number of her friends. Later, Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin gave a small tea for Lady Broderick and her daughter at the Goodwin home on Wyoming avenue.

Receiving informally, Mrs. Goodwin wore a black velvet tea gown, set off with a pearl-encrusted gold girdle. Lady Broderick wore a tailored black redingote with a skirt and vest of paisley and a black-veiled tricorne. Miss Broderick also wore a simple black frock, set off her ensemble with a black off-the-face hat, which was most becoming to her auburn hair.

Mrs. Close Among Guests

Among guests who called at 5 o'clock were Lady Chalkley, wife of the Commercial Counselor of the British Embassy; Mrs. Ralph William Close, wife of the South African Minister; Mrs. Harry Grant Meem and her daughter, Miss Eleanor Meem. Mrs. Oscar Underwood, Miss Patricia Hurley and Miss Patricia Prochnik, debs of this season, who arrived at the same time; Mrs. Thomas Armat and her sons, Brooke and hTomas, Sterling Bolling, Wollcott Waggamann, Lady Leslie and several others.

An hour later, just before dinner in fact, I dropped by Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard's home in Georgetown to find a very pleasant company gathered in honor of John Jennings, novelist, who is here briefly before heading for Central and South America, where his next novel will be set.

Like many another successful author, Mr. Jennings claims that he was discovered by H. S. Latham, the Macmillan executive who decided that Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind" would be a best-seller. Thousand Women and a Man (Jock Merriam) At Fashion Show in Sulgrave Club

A THOUSAND WOMEN and a man—he was Jock Merriam—surged into the Sulgrave Club for the Fashion Show held there yesterday afternoon to launch the new management of a smart local dress shop. What began as a showing of many attractive new styles, ended as a combined tea and cocktail party, all under the auspices of energetic Mrs. John R. Williams, who is owner of the shop and who has the success touch.

Everybody heaved sighs of relief when the models turned out to be professionals instead of self-conscious amateurs, and all the guests were loud in their praise both of the dresses and the Martinis. The din was terrific, the smoke haze thick, and the function had all the other earmarks of a successful party.

HANDSOME MRS. Huston Rawls, daughter of Mrs. Williams, sister of Mrs. Joseph Leiter, and president of the shop, stood at the head of the curving stairs and thrust programs into the hands of the guests. She was smartly turned out in a black dress with a bolero, two tremendous orchids pinned to her shoulder, and a dashing black hat which turned up at the side and sported a feather.

Nancy Leiter, Mrs. Williams' granddaughter, who now wears her hair in a brief pigtail effect, scurried about pouring dividends for the guests and otherwise being helpful. Mrs. Williams beamed from a comfortable armchair.

Anne Perin, who recently started in as salesgirl for the shop, stood at the entrance to the hall and ushered latecomers in, while the spectators craned necks, jotted down notes, and made appropriate feminine comments. Behind the scenes, pretty Mrs. George Eustis, who has come from Aiken, S. C., to manage the shop, marshaled the models, a vision in bright orange. Originally from Baltimore, she is a member of the Warfield, or Duchess of Windsor, family. Mrs. Gale McLean wandered about with an enormous silver tray, urging the guests to please have a sandwich.

THE FASHION SHOW was almost as much in the audience as among the exhibit, for there were many smart women present. The prize for chic should have gone to lovely Mrs. Warren Barbour, wife of the Senator from New Jersey, who wore a wool dress with a pale green blouse, darker green skirt and a turban to match with a streak of red velvet ribbon. Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, who had to leave early, wore a fingertip-length black Persian lamb cape over her black dress. She chatted with Mrs. Philip Coffin during the show.

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend stayed on for tea, as did Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney. The Misses Patten and Mrs. Hamilton Wright exchanged comments as they watched the models. Nearby sat Mrs. Donald Hiss, in a biege wool plaited number, with Mrs. L. M. C. Smith and Miss Marcia Umbsen.

MRS. STANLEY REED and Mrs. Thurman Arnold represented official circles at the showing. Mme. Prochnik and her daughter, Mrs. John de Sibour, both wore small hats of lipstick red. Mrs. William MacCracken, a late arrival, was greeted by shouts of "It's all over."

Others seen: Mrs. B. Lauriston Hardin, in her favorite dark green, so becoming with her red hair; Mrs. Horace Peters, who favors snoods this year; Mrs. J. Fred Essary with Mrs. John LaGorce, Mrs. William Morgan, Mrs. Eldridge Jordan, Mme. van Kaathoven and Mrs. Wallach Merriam.

MME. ESPIL, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, and her mother, Mrs. Frank Letts, both love the theater and practically every week attend the Wednesday matinee. "All we need to make the picture complete," says the envoy's wife, "is to share between us a box of bonbons with a pink tulle bow on the cover."

Greek Archeologist to Be Guest Of Minister Sicilianos Here

The Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos, will have as his guest this week-end Dr. Spyridon Marinatos, professor of archaeology at the University of Athens and director of the archaeological department of the Greek Ministry of Education.

A special feature of his Washington calendar is a lecture he will give at Barker Hall of the Y. W. C. A. on Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. The event is being given under the joint sponsorship of the St. Sophia Greek Orthodox community and the American Hellenic Youth League.

The public is invited and a special invitation has been extended to members of the Archaeological Society of Washington.

Dr. Marinatos' lecture will be based on his experiences and findings in connection with excavations he directed in Thermopylae, Crete and Cephalonia. Among notables who will attend the lecture is the Greek Archbishop of North and South America, His Grace the Most Reverend Athinagoras, who will be in Washington on Sunday for the special church services honoring the name day of the Greek Minister. This ceremony will take place at St. Sophia Greek Orthodox Church.

The Post Club Editor.

More than 400 women were registered yesterday for the opening session of the three-day Missionary Institute of the Women's Council of the Washington Federation of Churches, being held at the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church.

Church women of 18 denominations are co-operating in the project and mission leaders of Nation-wide prominence, including Mrs. Harper Sibley, of Rochester, N. Y., a former resident of Washington, are here to conduct the discussions.

Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, council president, addressing the morning session, declared church women had a great responsibility for promoting a unified world and urged that they work for a better understanding among all races and creeds.

"Running through the whole picture, you will detect a deep reverence, a warm affection for democracy. That respect for the traditions of democracy, that persistent overtone of the spirit that fired every great American in history, is not present in this movie by accident. One man was responsible. His name is Frank Capra."

EDITORIAL in The New York Daily Mirror, October 21, 1939

"... Its real hero is not calfy Jeff Smith, but the things he believes, as embodied in the hero of U. S. democracy's first crisis, Abraham Lincoln. Its big moment is ... when Jefferson Smith stands gawking in the Lincoln Memorial, listening to a small boy read from a tablet the question with which this film faces everyone who sees it: 'Whether that nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure'."

Miller Slated To Head New Traffic Setup

Police Captain To Become Inspector; Now Studying at Northwestern U.

By Howard F. Wentworth

Capt. Arthur Miller, former commander of the Third Police Precinct, who is now studying modern methods of traffic control and accident prevention at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., will head Washington's new traffic setup if and when present reorganization plans go through, it was learned on high authority last night.

Capt. Miller

Miller, it was further reported, is being groomed for an inspectorship and will receive the promotion even if proposals to revamp the city's traffic system are not adopted. The Commissioners are prepared to use his Northwestern University training to best advantage and Miller is assured of a high berth in the police department.

Under municipal reorganization suggestions of Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal, the present Department of Vehicles and Traffic would be abolished and its functions transferred to the police. If this is done, Miller would be placed in direct charge of all traffic activities, said The Post's informant.

Washington's traffic planning and enforcement system is now divided between Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, and Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer. Van Duzer's office handles the engineering and planning end of District traffic and Maj. Brown is charged with the enforcement of regulations. These duties would be combined under Seal's proposals.

Capt. Miller was selected for the eight-month Northwestern course by Maj. Brown. He was awarded a $1,200 fellowship offered by the Kemper Foundation for Traffic Police Training following a Nation-wide competition. The course opened September 18 and will end May 25.

Miller long has been active in local traffic work and at one time was considered for the post of police traffic supervisor, the position now held by Inspector William E. Holmes. It was decided, however, to provide Miller with further training before offering him the advancement.

With 21 other municipal and State officers, Miller is taking a variety of courses, ranging from enforcement problems and practical law to first aid and scientific engineering methods.

Capital News In Brief

Blasting Jolts Northwest

Windows rattled in northwest Washington last night, reverbations rolled and hundreds of anxious citizens swamped police, fire and newspaper switchboards with questions about "an earthquake" or an "air raid."

It was just a construction job. John Blake Gordon, District director of sanitation, explained the route for a new sewer from Rock Creek to Piney Branch was being blasted through rock and operations had approached the surface near Sixteenth street in Rock Creek Park.

The channel will be 14½ feet in diameter, Gordon said, and will cost $3,250,000.

Wanted: A Plaintiff

Washington police today will take a case to court without a complaining witness because they can't find the witness.

Yesterday they held Joseph Lee, colored, 34, of 1704 Corcoran street northwest, on a chrage of attempted pocketbook snatching. They said he was captured after J. S. Long, of 1311 P street northwest, driving by with his wife, saw a woman being robbed at Eighteenth and Q streets. Long leaped from his automobile, pursued the bandit, and Mrs. Long drove to a drug store and summoned police.

Though efforts since have failed to unearth the woman who was being robbed, police last night said they'd take their case to court anyway.

Canvasser Arrested

An erstwhile advertising canvasser for a "police and firemen's journal" was in jail last night after a District detective watched him accept $10 for "advertising" space and sign a receipt for it.

It came about when Karl Merchelte, tobacconist at 503 Twelfth street northwest, was approached by a 35-year-old man allegedly representing the journal. He told police he had bought such space before without result, so while he had the man wait, he called detective headquarters.

Detective Sergt. Jack Baker responded and made the arrest after he watched the sale completed.

Society to Give Play

"Cheese Cottage"—a comedy—will be presented tonight and tomorrow at 8 p. m. by the young People's Society of Grace Lutheran Church, in the parish hall at Sixteenth and Varnum streets northwest. Refreshments will be sold.

Sweeney Gets New Post

Warren Sweeney, of Arlington, Va., and announcer for Distrlict radio station since 1930, will join the Columbia Broadcasting System's New York staff next week, it was announced last night. A native of Washington, he attended Gonzaga High School and Georgetown University until he abandoned his college work for broadcasting in 1930.

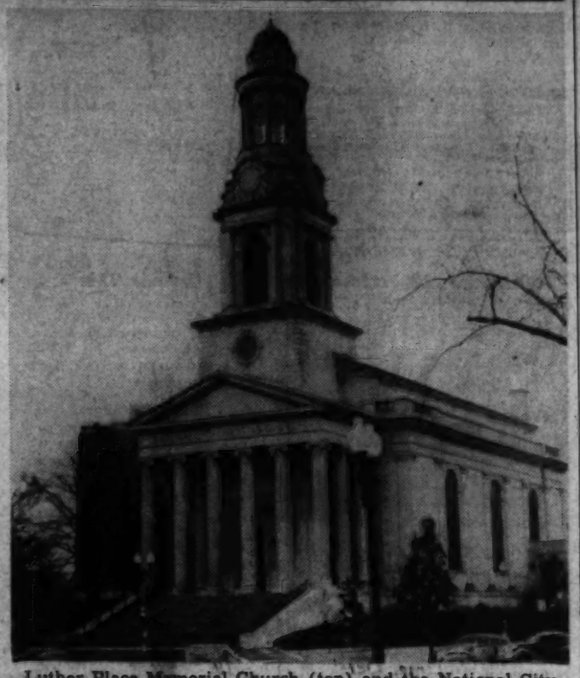
Mid-City Section Represents Heyday of Capital in '90's



Luther Place Memorial Church (top) and the National City Christian Church (lower) both on Thomas Circle

By Christine Sadler.

Washington's city fathers took themselves in hand at one of their council meetings in 1800 and pushed through a measure that proclaimed their progressiveness. It was entitled "an act to prevent swine from going at large" in the Nation's capital.

Above Massachusetts avenue, of course, all rules were off—for the fathers did not presume to rule over the "wilderness." Even as late as 1850, when the First Ward area around the White House was flourishing, the development along Massachusetts had come west from the Union Station vicinity only far enough to take in Mount Vernon Square.

Although usually spoken of as the "old" central part of Washington, the midcity section was a long time a-growing and flourished during the 80's and 90's.

When bicycles came in, Florida avenue marked the northern boundary, but Logan Circle—still unnamed—was a suburban outpost. The early bicycle races were held there, round and round the wide open space that first was called Iowa Circle and later labelled for the general whose statue now adorns it.

Turreted Housetops

Footprints of the gay and fashionable nineties are found all around Logan, Thomas and Scott circles—and down the avenues in their vicinities. Round and square bay window arrangements, turreted housetops, fancy brick designs, porches decorated with tricky grillwork, stretches of wide brick sidewalks—all are there. Flowers still bloom in side yards and there are some front gates.

For all of "mid city" has not succumbed to the boarding-house urge. Mrs. Ella M. Thompson, who has just been elected president of the Logan-Thomas Circle Citizens Association for the fifteenth time, has lived at 1120 Rhode Island avenue, just off Logan Circle, for almost 30 years and has no intention of moving. She moved in while the neighborhood was enjoying an elegance that never returned after the World War.

Her neighbors around the circle include Miss Ethel E. Foster, who lives at No. 19 in the first house built there, and Misses Grace, Marian and Aleta Reed, who live at No. 6, in the home built by their father, Admiral Alan V. Reed.

Dr. Daniel S. Foster, who built No. 19 and was the father of Miss Foster, was a prominent physician, who was permitted to select the first name for the circle. He called it Iowa. His home was built around 1873.

Legation Neighborhood

President Grant built Nos. 1 and 2, planning to live in one of them after he was out of the White House. The Venezuelan Legation occupied the former for a number of years. The Japanese Legation was on N street nearby; the Peruvian on Thirteenth street nearby, and the Korean Legation at 1500 Thirteenth street—where Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Fulton have lived for many years.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles K. Koones have lived at 20 Logan Circle for 40 years and plan to stay on.

When Miss Foster was a little girl, the President's carriage came often to the home of Postmaster General Vilas, who lived at No. 27. "Ambassadors, congressmen, Army and Navy families, and leading officials lived all over the area. Today only the German Embassy is left, down near Thomas Circle, at 1439 Massachusetts avenue," she recalled yesterday.

Franklin School, now the headquarters of the District's Board of Education, was built in 1869.

Historic Churches There

Churches of the central part also are old and historic. The Washington Guide Book lists six of them as worthy of any tourist's time. They are: Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, built by Southern funds in 1869; National City Christian Church on Thomas Circle, designed by John Russell Pope; New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, of which John Quincy Adams was a member and where Lincoln often worshiped; St. Matthews Church, the green copper dome of which is a District landmark; St. Patrick's, the oldest Catholic church in the city proper; the Washington Hebrew Congregation, largest one of Jews in Washington.

James F. Duhamel, secretary of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, said yesterday: "I recall playing on the foundations of Luther Place Memorial Church where the statue of Martin Luther is, during the Civil War. Construction on it and other buildings were stopped by the conflict.

"During the 50's the area flourished, but lagged after the war until the 80's and 90's. About 1820 Clement Hill built a home out in the suburbs on the site now occupied by the National City Christian Church.

Hell's Bottom

"Fourteenth street was one of the main highways leading out of Washington, so it was marked for improvement as early as 1805. It was improved up to Florida avenue. I used to go over it on my way to Rock Creek for a swim.

"Northeast of Logan Circle there was a section known as Hell's Bottom. It was filled with shacks of former slaves and in it were thrown up homes for the contrabands coming here during and immediately after the war."

Traces of the hastily built homes still are evident in the big central area bounded by North Capitol street, Florida, Fifteenth, and the Mall. Interior slum alleys and depreciated residential blocks, along with the lack of playgrounds, make up the principal problems of the Midcity Citizens, headed by A. J. Driscoll, and of the many churches.

More than 83,000 persons live in the central area. Alleys, cleaned out a few years ago, are inhabited again—by persons pushed in when homes were destroyed in other sections. "Something must be done to relieve the congestion," Mrs. Thompson said.

Tomorrow—Old Georgetown.

A.F.L. Claims Organization Strike Rights

Seeks Dismissal Of Criminal Conspiracy Charge Against Union

The American Federation of Labor claimed the right to strike for organizational purposes yesterday in arguments before Justice Gordon on the A. F. L. motion to dismiss criminal conspiracy charges against a Washington teamster union which fought to recruit members of an operating engineers' union.

The union and six officials were indicted on charges of restraint of trade, in violation of the Sherman antitrust act, which hampered public and private construction here for several months.

Joseph Padway, A. F. L. attorney, told the court that union activity for lawful purposes was expressly exempted from the antitrust law by the Clayton act.

Gordon Dean, assistant to the Attorney General, told Justice Gordon that the union ought to be made to stand trial on the charges in the indictment that violence and coercion were brought into play in the jurisdictional dispute.

Justice Gordon took the question under advisement. Both sides will submit written briefs.

Meanwhile it was learned the Carpenters District Council is negotiating with employer groups on a proposed reduction of the wage scale of carpenters employed in residential construction.

The drop in wages from $1.56 to $1.12½ an hour would not apply to Government buildings or commercial undertakings, Frank J. Sheehan, secretary-treasurer of the Master Builders Association, declared. He predicted adoption of the proposal would cause an increase in residential building and thus raise employment.

Old Covenant On Land May Halt Liquor Sales

Two women owners of property in the Woodridge neighborhood sued in District Court yesterday to enforce 50-year-old covenants forbidding sales of liquor against holders of two liquor licenses in the area.

John L. Fowler, attorney for the plaintiffs, said the Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association was interested in the proceeding because the outcome might determine the validity of many other covenants affecting property in the vicinity.

Mrs. Helen T. Worth, of 2403 Irving street northeast, and Mrs. Mary K. Weber, of 2369 Rhode Island avenue northeast, asked the court to enjoin the sale of liquor by Louis J. Cataldi, of 2373 Rhode Island avenue northeast, and George H. Lane, described as operator of a store at 2375 Rhode Island avenue northeast. Cataldi, the complaint said, holds a Class "B" liquor license, authorizing sale of beer and wine, and Lane holds a Class "A" license, authorizing sale of hard liquor.

The complaint said 109 acres of land in the Woodbridge area was deeded in 1887 by Abram P. Fardon and Eddy B. Townsend with the provision that none of it ever should be used for the liquor business. Fowler said his clients contended that this covenant is binding on all later owners.

Catholic U. Aide Falls, Breaks Leg

Dr. Francis O. Rice, head of the chemistry department at Catholic University, suffered a broken left leg in a freak accident yesterday on the B. & O. Railroad tracks at Silver Spring.

He was crossing the tracks in front of the station when his foot became wedged under a rail, causing him to fall. The Silver Spring rescue squad took him to the Washington Sanitarium. He was later sent to his home, 834 Woodside parkway, Silver Spring.

Halloween Prelude

Halloween Queen Missing at West End Parade, But 5 Bands Play and Judge Speaks on Vote

Winnie wasn't there, but the satin-uniformed Job's Daughters drill team (top) and the Knights of Columbus Band (lower) were. They swung around Washington Circle in the first annual parade of the West End Business Men's Association

Five bands blared and ten blocks of marchers and floats paraded, but residents of the West End searched in vain last night for Halloween Queen Winnie Porter, for Winnie wasn't there.

There were few frowning faces, however, by the time the West End Business Men's Association finished its first annual parade at Washington Circle under a dazzling canopy of searchlight beams. And 1,000 West Enders, bundled up against the fall chill, stopped craning their necks watching for the Queen and crowded about the reviewing stand to hear Judge Nathan Cayton, of the Municipal Court.

Queen Winnie, a West End waitress, can appear in no parades before her coronation Monday at the Raleigh Hotel, according to a ruling by the Greater National Capital Committee of the Board of Trade, sponsor of next Tuesday's Halloween parade.

Argues For Suffrage

Judge Cayton told the jubilant crowd in Washington Circle that "such public meetings are the one way of giving expression to our views as citizens." Arguing that suffrage must come to the District, if the people want it badly enough to "fight for it," he said that citizens' associations and such groups as the newly organized West End Business Men's Association must "fill the gap at present" by making their views known on public questions.

"We must keep working and fighting until we get the vote," he said.

Leading the parade behind a motorcycle police escort were cars containing the officers and directors of the business men's association, Walter Wasson, president of the West End Citizens' Association; Capt. J. E. Bowers, of Third Precinct, and Lieut. Col. Leroy Mann, of the 260th Coast Artillery, National Guard.

Grim olive drab National Guard trucks and motorized cannon rolling heavily behind formed a sharp contrast to the gaily decorated cars and brilliantly clothed bands and marching units.

Just Felt Like a Parade

"Why the parade?" someone yelled at the association's presidents, Charles L. Norris.

"Well, we just felt like holding one, that's all," he shouted back over the braying of the bugles and the pounding of the drums.

And everyone seemed to be having a great time, except a little 9-year-old bugler in American [illegible] Band, who slipped back 5 feet every time he raised his instrument to his lips and stumbled along, trying to catch up, trying to keep from falling, and trying to blow his bugle, all at the same time.

In among the floats advertising West End stores marched the pretty, uniformed Job's Daughters, the Elks' Club Boys' Band, the [illegible] Band, and the 260th Coast Artillery Regimental Band.

Work Starts Tomorrow on Flood Sewer

May End 10 Years Of Storm Damage; Bids on Last Section To Be Opened Nov. 3

Bids will be opened November 3 for the construction of the final two-thirds of the Arkansas avenue sewer extension, a project which promises to end 10 years of floods and property damage in the area, the Arkansas Avenue Community Association was told last night.

The announcement came in a report by the sewerage committee after a meeting with officials in the District Sanitary Engineer's office. The committee said that construction of the first unit of the sewer system will begin tomorrow morning. Officers and members will be present at the Arkansas avenue entrance to Rock Creek Park to watch the work begin.

Bus Stop Sought

A resolution was adopted thanking Washington newspapers for cooperation with residents of the area in promoting the civic improvement.

Other resolutions adopted at a meeting last night called for the removal of traffic hazards on Thirteenth street at Emerson and Decatur streets northwest, and the establishment of a bus stop near Decatur street on the Thirteenth street express.

A committee, headed by A. M. Ensor, was appointed to submit the proposals to Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, and to Public Utilities Commission officials.

Debate Planned

Following a lengthy discusion, the association decided to stage a debate at its next meeting on Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal's proposal to transfer control of the city hospitals from the Health Department to a new department of hospitals.

Dr. Milton A. Juster will speak for the proposal, and C. H. Dexter will argue against it. The association also urged the estbalishment of a better pistol range for policemen of the Sixth Precinct.

Indians' Price For Manhattan Called Enough

$120 Worth of Beads 'Highly Satisfactory,' Realtors Are Told

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Oct. 25.—Purchase of Manhattan Island from the Indians for $120 worth of beads was cited to the National Association of Real Estate Board today as "a deal that was highly satisfactory to both principals."

"Novices in the real estate business are frequently hindered by a mistaken notion that a piece of property has an identical value to everyone," Hobart C. Brady, of Wichita, Kans., told the brokers' division of the association's annual convention.

"The utility of Manhattan Island to the Indians was very little because they had a surplus of land. The $120 worth of beads was highly desirable."

Real estate value depends upon its usefulness, Ayres J. Du Bois, of Washington, chief of the valuation section of the Federal Housing Administration, told a convention session.

"With the population of the Nation indicated to be approaching a maximum, and with the disappearance of the frontier, we may suspect that the century and a half old phenomenon of rising land values has ceased to exist.

"But even though the long upward value trend cannot be counted upon as generally applying, this does not mean that values will become 'stabilized' at existing levels."

He defined variables affecting real estate values as "the purchasing power of the dollar" and "the apparent imminence of a war-stimulated prosperity."

Wilfred Stevens, Language Expert For U. S., Is Dead

Wilfred Stevens, 65, former principal translator for the State Department, died Saturday of apoplexy in Providence Hospital. His body will be cremated today.

Mr. Stevens was reputed to have had a working knowledge of more than 30 languages and was a profound researcher into obscure tongues. He developed a new language, intended to be universal, that was said to have been formed of elements of the earlies tongues.

He was born in Shakopee, Minn., on May 16, 1874, and came to Washington in 1894 to work as a proofreader in the Government Printing Office. Later he was employed as a librarian and translator in the War Department. Remaining there seven years, he transferred to the State Department, where he became chief translator in 1930. He was in retirement on his farm at Oak Hill, Md., since 1931.

Augustana Church Holds Neighbor Night

D. C. Officials, Pastors Praise Congregation For Its Progress

Congratulations from Washington's civic officials and churchmen echoed through the Augustana Lutheran Church last night, as parishioners staged a "Neighbors Night" celebration of dedication week.

Packing the edifice at New Hampshire avenue and V street northwest, which they recently purchased and renovated, and last Sunday formally dedicated, the churchmen and their leader, Dr. Arthur O. Hjelm, were lauded by Senator Henrik Shipstead (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota, and many others.

"I am amazed at the work that has been done by Dr. Hjelm," said the legislator, declaring that "the progress than has been made has been due to his untiring efforts and the loyalty and devotion of his congregation." He recalled that he had first met Dr. Hjelm in a small mission chapel downtown.

Earlier, greetings came from Dr. W. L. Darby, executive secretary of the washington Federation of Churches; the Rev. Edward Goetz, president of the Washington Lutheran Ministerial Association; the Rev. S. E. Engstrom, executive director of home missions in the Augusta Synod, and Dr. P. O. Bersell, president of the Synod.

Felicitations were read from Commissioner Hazen; W. Bostrom, minister from Sweden; Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, minister from Norway; Oscar L. Chapman, assistant secretary of the Interior; Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, and Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia.

Participating in the service were Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor of Reformation Lutheran Church and Dr. Gerhard E. Lenski, Grace Lutheran pastor.

A festival organ dedication service tomorrow at 8 p. m., led by Dean Shure, choirmaster of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, will conclude the celebration.

Brown to Ask Ticket-Fixing Clarification

Question Is Whether 'Warnings' to Drivers Shall Be Published

The Commissioners this morning will be asked to interpret their recent order to Police Chief Brown that he "make a matter of public record the names of persons having traffic tickets canceled."

A move to clarify the issue was started yesterday when it was learned that the names of 72 motorists who received "warnings" on traffic tickets last week were not disclosed Monday with those of 15 drivers who had tickets "canceled."

It was explained that a ticket is "canceled" when no violation has been committed, whereas a "warning" is issued when the violation is one on which a personal bond would be taken in court.

Maj. Brown said yesterday that the Commissioners' order made no mention of the word "warning" but said "to make public the names of persons who have tickets canceled."

Meanwhile, however, Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal, who first suggested that the names be made public "to stop the practice of ticket-fixing once and for all," indicated he thought the police were evading the issue.

"The disposition of any traffic violation notice by means of the issuance of a 'warning,'" Seal stated, "is a cancellation of the ticket and in my opinion comes within the spirit and purpose of the Commissioners' order.

"In such cases, the name of the person who made the request should be made a matter of public record. Any other interpretation would be equivalent to an evasion of the order."

Army to Adopt Comfortable And Sporty Olive Uniform

Drab Found Better for Camouflage Than Slate Blue After a Tryout; Loose Fit Lets Soldiers Fight Better

By John G. Norris.

The Army is going to change to a more comfortable and sporty field uniform, officials announced yesterday, retaining, however, the present olive drab color, standard since the World War.

A year's test with an experimental slate blue "sport" model outfit has convinced the War Department that soldiers can fight better in the new, loose-fitting garb, but that its color offers less camouflage than the present dess. Replacement will be gradual throughout the service, it was said.

At the same time, the Department moved to fill shortages of officers in newly created combat units. By cutting short the courses of 11 Army schools and ordering Reserve officers to active duty, officials expect to have 2,000 additional officers available for winter training of the five new "stream-lined" divisions.

School to Finish Early

More than 650 officers will be released for troop duty shortly after February 1, by concluding the school courses then instead of in June. Ordinarily students finish the theoretical phase of the course in February, and then proceed to apply the principles of warfare in small field exercises and map problems. This year, they will be able to put the theories to practical application with large bodies of troops.

The schools affected include the Engineer School at Fort Belvoir, Va., but not the Army war or industrial colleges here. Plans now being drafted would provide a number of special courses for junior National Guard and reserve officers next spring in the institutions emptied by the regulars.

Approximately 1,300 junior reserve officers will be ordered to active duty shortly after the first of the year, the War Department stated, provided Congress appropriates funds. Announcement of the plan is made now in order that corps area commanders can canvas eligible officers and have orders ready when needed, of those who would accept assignments.

"The additional officers will be needed in connection with the increase now being made in the enlisted ranks of the Army in accordance with recent executive authorization," the announcement said. "Also it will provide an excellent opportunity for the officers to receive training, particularly with the large units being trained under the planned division concentration program."

None of the officers to be selected will come from the Air Corps, it was said, although both combat and medical officers will be chosen. Selection of the former will be limited to first and second lieutenants, less than 30 years old and who have less than six years' service. They will serve not more than six months.

Medical officers picked for active service will serve for one year. Only captains and lieutenants less than 33 years old will be eligible. Officers were asked not to apply for duty, but to wait until the Army got in touch with them.

The new style uniform under test at Fort George G. Meade, Md., and other posts, has a shirt with sport collar, coat with pleated shoulders, collapsible cap and trousers with canvas leggings in place of breeches and wrapped puttees. Many of these features will be embodied in the approved new design.

The announcement of the early closing of Army schools said the following institutions would be affected: Command and General Staff School, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; Quartermaster School, Philadelphia; Quartermaster Motor Transport School and Army Finance School, Baltimore; Signal Corps School, Fort Monmouth, N. J.; Chemical Warfare School, Edgewood Arsenal, Md.; Cavalry School, Fort Riley, Kans.; Field Artillery School, Fort Sill, Okla.; Coast Artillery School, Fort Monroe, Va.; Engineer School, Fort Belvoir, Va., and Infantry School, Fort Benning, Ga.

The Washington Post Sports

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The Georgetown-George Washington football game on Saturday won't be worth watching if it smacks of the pre-game love feasts the athletic officials of the two institutions have been staging all week. In an effort to prove that intra-city competition can be healthy and devoid of rowdiness the gentlemen are outdoing each other in politeness.

POVICH

Any fight fan who had seen Coaches Jack Hagerty and Bill Reinhart with their heads together in solicitous greetings, and Athletic Director H. Gabriel Murphy and Max Farrington tete-a-teting all over the Willard Hotel the other night, would have had his own idea about Saturday's ball game. "It's in the bag," he'd probably say.

Happily the extreme politeness will vanish with the opening toot of the referee's whistle two days hence and the solid thudding of finely trained young bodies will be the keynote. The boys will get their orders to keep it clean, but any legitimate violence they commit will be all right with their coaches. It bears all the earmarks of a swell football game between a pair of teams folks want to see play. That's why the affair is registering the greatest advance sale in the history of a college game here.

Much Depends on Students' Conduct

Georgetown and G. W. U. ought to be concerned with the cleanliness and the conduct of the ball game for at least a couple of reasons. Firstly, they are meeting under something of a cloud. George Washington withdrew from local competition years ago because President Cloyd Heck Marvin was convinced that undergraduates couldn't be controlled. "Intra-city competition is unhealthy," was one of the reasons he advanced for canceling the series of games with Catholic University.

He had his reasons. There had been riots by the rival student bodies, fired to a high pitch by the significance of the game. In other cities, local rivalry had been a flop. At Lexington, Va., V. M. I. and Washington and Lee, with campuses virtually across the street from each other, haven't played for more than 20 years because rowdiness marked their battles. The Duquesne-Pittsburgh game of last Saturday will be the last between those two colleges.

So Saturday's game between G. U. and G. W. U. will be a test, a test of the two institutions' ability to keep a football game free of incidents. G. W. U. perhaps has taken heart from the fact that Georgetown-Maryland games have been played since 1934 without recriminations. Perhaps college officials are getting smarter and developing more faith in their ability to handle undergraduate enthusiasm. Anyway, they are leaning over backward to keep this game respectable.

Game Is 'Soft Touch' Financially

It may be a bit crass, perhaps, to mention also that Georgetown and G. W. U. should be concerned about this game if only for financial reasons. Out of deference to their athletic department exchequers they should seek to perpetuate it. For their respective athletic funds, the game on Saturday represents a soft touch.

They don't have to spend a nickel for traveling expenses or guarantees and they will split college football's largest gate of the season locally. If the anticipated 25,000 fans arrive at the park, the gate will hover close to 35,000 and enable both colleges to show a healthy profit. In fact it might mean the difference between a winning and losing year financially.

We don't know how George Washington football teams have been faring, but Georgetown hasn't been able to break even on football since 1930. In that year, Tommy Mills took over the relics of Lou Little's great teams and with Georgetown owning something of a reputation the Hoyas played to 55,000 persons against N. Y. U. at Yankee Stadium. Georgetown's end of that gate was $40,000.

55,000 Gates Extinct for Hoyas Now

Those days are gone forever, perhaps, but while they lasted they were lush ones indeed. A Georgetown-N. Y. U. game at New York fetched fans at prices ranging as high as $5.50 a head. Those were the days when college football was heady with success and the full effects of the great depression not yet felt.

Two, three or five years hence, the G. U.-G. W. U. game will probably pack Griffith Stadium annually. This year the two colleges are sharing in the general upswing of football interest in Washington spurred chiefly, no doubt, by the fancy play of the professional Redskins. But a G. U.-G. W. U. game can hardly ripen to full financial bloom within a couple of years.

A great percentage of the Redskins' followers are not the native Washingtonians but the emigres from other sections of the country who came here in Government service and owed no allegiance to Washington colleges. But a G. U.-G. W. U. game can scarcely fail to establisn itself as an important local fixture within a few years and make the great bulk of Capital fans conscious of the fact that here is the sort of a game they ought to see.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Oct. 25.—Departmenting the news:

REAL ESTATE—When gnarled but knobby Ace Gutowsky hit the middle of the Philadelphia line last Sunday and gained a bruising yard for the Brooklyn Dodgers he broke by the margin of that yard the record of 3,398 yards of ground gained by a professional football backfield man. The old mark was established over an eight-year period by Cliff Battles.

CONSIDINE

Gutowsky has pierced the greatest lines of all time for gains amounting to a little less than 2 miles of dirt. He need go only 122 more yards to reach the 2-mile mark, but he may have to postpone his ambition to improve his mark this Sunday. For then he will have the Giants line to hit that doesn't bend. Just what he will do with his 2-mile mark when he gets it he hasn't decided. The record, plus one buck, will buy him the finest dollar shirt now made.

RIDDLE—When the news services begin to tabulate the memorable events of the 1939, there is a ball game which should be listed as the screwiest of the year. It was played in the Southern League between Atlanta and Chattanooga. Chattanooga was trailing, 0-3, with two out in the last half of the ninth, but had the bases filled. The batter hit a ball to Rucker, the Atlanta outfielder, who pegged low and hard to Manager Richards, the catcher.

The ball hit Richards' glove, bounced in the air and landed in the umpire's coat pocket in which the arbiter had stored two other balls. In the unprecedented confusion, with runners heading home, the ump emptied his pocket and the balls dropped on the ground. Richards, in a sweaty quandary, made a frantic inspection in an effort to pick the right one with which to tag the stream of runners. He changed his mind, picked up another ball, tagged with it, and neglected the third ball. The umpire ruled all men safe, because the correct ball was not positively identified. Richards chased him off the field with a bat.

LIVESTOCK—The rodeo season, not only at Madison Square Garden but elsewhere in the United States, has proven that the greatest steer rider in the daffy game today is Mitch Owens, a laconic soul who runs a small ranch outside of Fresno, Calif. He has been riding in competition for half his 26 years and is the only man who has not been thrown from the back of one of those earthquaking steers at the Garden. The other cowboys are making an intensive study of his riding form trying to piece together the secret of how he stays on. It's tough to copy Owens. He has only one hand.

REWARD—Nobody in his right mind is going to kick very strenuously about the most valuable player designation given to Joe DiMaggio. It must be a little more than blind coincidence that since he has come into the American League the Yanks have won the pennant and the World Series each year. As great as DiMaggio is it seems to me he was no more valuable to the Yanks this year than was Ruffing or Bill Dickey. The club would have been hurt more by Dickey's absence than by the absence of any other member of the team. Our general idea of a most valuable player is rarely one of a cluster of stars on a great ball club. It's a fellow like Dutch Leonard, who won 20 games for the sixth place Washington Nats, who gave him about as many runs as you'll find in Marlene Dietrich's new stockings.

47 Horses Accept Weights For 100th Cesarewitch Stakes

By the United Press

London, England, Oct. 25.—Forty-seven of 73 eligible horses, including John Hay Whitney's Valedictory, the only American, accepted weights today for the 100th running of the classic Cesarewitch Stakes, to be held over the summer course at Newmarket on November 2.

Despite the near record number of accepiors, the field is expected to start intact. Because of war restrictions the race, which has been held every year since 1839, will be run over a route of 2 miles and 24 yards instead of 2 miles and a quarter for a purse of only $2,580 instead of the usual $15,000.

High weight of 133 pounds was assigned Lord Milford's Flyon, which was expected to be installed one of the favorites when the betting opens late this week. Another well-liked entry was Sir Alfred Butts' light-weighted filly, Contatrice II, who will carry only 103 pounds. Valedictory was given 119 pounds and Richard Middlemass' Contrevent, winner last year, 124.

The Cesarewitch originally was scheduled to run on October 25 but was canceled because of the war. Later it was rescheduled.

M'Phail Favors 'Free-for-All' World Series

Latest Idea Calls for 8 Playoffs

Even Last Finishers In American, National Would Tangle; Plan To Settle Supremacy

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 25.—Never at a loss for an idea, General Manager Larry MacPhail of the Brooklyn Dodgers came out today in favor of turning the World Series into a free-for-all between the 16 big league clubs.

MACPHAIL

Specifically, the red-headed genius of Flatbush said he would suggest at the midwinter meeting in Cinnati that there be eight playoffs next October instead of the customary one, thus settling the question of supremacy between the National and American leagues with a vengeance.

Play-Off for All Teams

Under the MacPhail plan the World Series between the flag-winning clubs would be played exactly as at present. Then there also would be a play-off between the second-place teams, the third placers, and so on down to a fierce interleague struggle between, say, the Phillies and the St. Louis Browns.

"Each game in the interleague series would count equally," Larry proposes, "and the league winning the greater number of games would hold for one year a trophy emblematic of league supremacy.

"No fair-minded person questions the World Series accomplishments of the Yankees," he added, "but the Yankees have also overwhelmed the American League. Their unbroken string of successes has created an impression in some quarters that the American is the stronger league. This does not necessarily follow. Many are convinced the National is the better-balanced league.

MacPhail's Own Brainchild

"I hope the National League will challenge the American League to such a series, the games to be played under the jurisdiction of the commissioner of baseball, with players participating in the net receipts."

The idea apparently was MacPhail's own brain child, for President Ford Frick of the National League said this was the first he had heard of it. In other words, it must not be assumed that this is a National League plot designed to take some of the curse off its pitiful showing in recent World Series.

I don't think I should comment before Larry proposes it at the meeting," said Frick. "But I don't think it sounds so silly. Theoretically, I should say it's a good idea. Offhand, the only objection I foresee is that all the other series might detract from interest in the World Series, and that some of the playoffs between clubs near the bottom might require league financing."

Logical Answer

MacPhail had a pat answer for this one:

"Why would it lessen interest in the world's championship?" he asked. "The series between the pennant winners can be played in only two cities and only a comparatively small number of fans can attend. In any event, profit is not the only yardstick with which to measure the value of such a series to baseball."

President Horace Stoneham of the Giants said it wasn't a bad idea, but that it needed to be toned down. He suggested that series between the first three or four clubs in each league would be ample for the purpose.

A. L. President Withholds Opinion

Chicago, Oct. 25 (AP).—William Harridge, president of the American League, tonight withheld his opinion of the proposal of Larry MacPhail, Brooklyn general manager, that the World Series be turned into a free-for-all between the 16 major league teams.

He said he preferred "to wait until we hear from MacPhail at the midwinter meeting."

"It is a radical change from the World Series setup and would require careful consideration," he added. "I would rather the comment and decision came from the American League club owners."

Griff Calls McPhail's Series Plan 'Crazy'

Clark Griffith, president of the Washington Nats, last night called Larry McPhail's playoff plan "crazy." He said:

"Just say for me that McPhail is on the wrong track.

"Somebody proposed this a long time ago, and it was just as silly then as it is now."

Challedon Works Out At Pimlico

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Oct. 25.—Challedon, W. L. Brann's 3-year-old champion, came over from Laurel today to begin tuning up for the Pimlico Special, the race in which the Maryland-bred colt will make his bid for the "horse of the year" title.

Trainer Lou Schaefer said Challedon would be given a workout tomorrow morning. The big bay colt, leading money-winner of the year with earnings of $174,535) was stabled in the same barn with T. B. Martin's Cravat, also a candidate for the Special.

They will be joined tomorrow by C. S. Howard's Kayak 2d, winner of the Continental Handicap at Jamaica last Saturday, the same day that Challedon won the Maryland Handicap at Laurel. Kayak is second to Challedon in 1939 earnings, with $161,025.

William Woodward's Isolater, the fourth horse to accept an invitation to the Special, worked impressively at Laurel today, covering a mile and an eighth in 1:52 2-5. Isolater may be a starter in the Washington Handicap at Laurel Saturday.

Cravat also may get in another race before the Special. Trainer Walter Burrows, who has been trying to develop Cravat's early speed, has entered him in the 6-furlong Delmar Handicap at Laurel tomorrow.

The Pimlico Special will be run November 1 over a mile and three-sixteenths.

Straight Betting Announced for Special

There will be straight betting only in the Pimlico Special on November 1, it was announced by Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, president of the Maryland Jockey Club, yesterday.

The decision to restrict the betting to a win pool in the pari-mutuels was made for two reasons.

First, since the $10,000 prize money in the race is all to the winner, it obviates the possibility of unnecessarily punishing a beaten horse to earn second money.

Secondly, with only straight wagering, any claim that the invitation of more than two horses to the big race was made to insure more than straight betting is refuted.

Navy, Notre Dame Meet In Baltimore Next Year

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 25.—Navy and Notre Dame will meet at the Municipal Stadium here November 9 in one of the big football games of the season next fall, and there is a possibility that Navy and Cornell will play an additional game, probably on October 12.

Official announcement has not been forthcoming as yet, following customary reticence at the United States Naval Academy, where the schedule must be completed and sanctioned in its entirety by the superintendent.

It is certain, however, that Navy and Notre Dame will meet November 9, and that it is Navy's home game. It also has been said off the record that Navy and Notre Dame will meet in this city in 1941.

So far as Cornell's status is concerned, the Ithaca team has a commitment with Navy for October 18, 1941, and a full schedule for 1940.

Wild Pep Rally Set Tonight For Hilltop

Georgetown Students To Build Up Spirit With Citywide Parade

The wildest pep rally in Georgetown history is scheduled to start at 7 o'clock tonight with a bonfire at the Hilltop, where students and alumni will pay tribute by songs and cheers to Head Coach Jack Hagerty and his Hoya gridmen, who are undefeated since 1937.

Following the celebration at quadrangle, the crowd will move through Georgetown and into the streets of Washington in a gigantic victory parade. The parade will be led by the school's 60-piece band and a cavalcade of automobiles, crammed full of noisy students.

At the bonfire members of the football team will be introduced by the Rev. John J. Kehoe, S. J., faculty moderator of athletics, who also will give the key speech. Other speakers will include Coach Hagerty, Quarterback Joe McFadden and other outstanding players.

Between 8:30 and 9 o'clock the pep rally will be transferred to Station WOL, where the Georgetown Glee Club, under the direction of Dr. Edward P. Donovan, will go into action, with District Court Judge Walter Casey as guest of honor.

Among the speakers on the program will be Denny Hughes, a former George Washington player, and Heinie Jewish, who played both with Georgetown and George Washington. He was with G. U. against G. W. back in 1923, the last year the schools met on the gridiron.

Despite a gratifying advance sale, there are plenty of good seats left for Saturday's game, the Georgetown athletic office announced last night. Tickets are on sale at both schools, at Spalding's, the American Automobile Association, and at Griffith Stadium.

Columbia Club Members Approve 11-Acre Purchase

Columbia Country Club members approved the purchase of approximately 11 acres of land bordering the first four holes in the annual meeting last night at the club. The purpose is to protect the club from real estate developments, such as the one bordering the fifth hole at the present.

The nominating committee's choice of club officers were elected for the second term, Martin R. West, president, and Clyde Garrett, vice president. T. Stanley Holland was again elected treasurer and Arthur B. Shelton, secretary, a position he has held for many years.

The five members of the board of governors for the term ending October, 1942, will be Harry J. Kane, jr., Dana C. Belser, Archibald McLachlen, Irwin S. Porter and J. E. Heberle. Curtis Walker will serve on the board until October, 1940.

With the purchase of the additional land the second tee will be changed while the tee on the par 3 fourth hole will be moved back to its original position.

Georgetown To Depend On Kopcik

Both Schools Use Linemen for Most Of Punting, Lio Is Hoya Dependable

By Jack Munhall.

Football linemen always have a kick coming after games when flashy halfbacks and barging fullbacks leap from their shoulders and into the headlines while the linesmen themselves command less attention than a liquor salesman at a W. C. T. U. meeting.

But come Saturday afternoon and the Georgetown George Washington game at Griffith Stadium these forgotten fellows are expected to do plenty of premature kicking. Never in the memory of old timers have there been as many talented booters among local college linesmen as there are today.

Georgetown all season has been greatly indebted to Mike Kopcik, a husky sophomore end for his booming punts which have kept the opposition on the defensive, and to Augie Lio, a squat 200-pound guard who is consistent point-getter with his placements for field goals and extra points.

But it is only lately that George Washington has fully begun to appreciate the kicking potentialities possessed by one Tim Swett, now a guard but in previous years a fullback and center. Perhaps it shouldn't be said that George Washington hasn't known that Swett could send the ball off consistently for 50, 60 and even 70 yards, but rather that Coach Bill Reinhart wasn't quite sure he could get it away in time. Swett appeared too be just a little slow.

Practice Improved Speed

Persistent daily practice, during which Swett has done little more than kick, working all the time to acquire a little added speed, has enabled him to accomplish the results. And yesterday Reinhart placed his final stamp of approval on the 192-pound junior from Fort Sill, Okla.

"Swett'll do most of our kicking Saturday," Reinhart predicted, "and I believe he will make a big difference. You know our punting hasn't been very good. A kick that traveled less than 20 yards put us in a tough spot in The Citadel game."

So it will be Tim Swett, a guard, kicking against Mike Kopcik, an end, when the Colonials and Hoyas come to grips. The spectacle should be interesting since neither boy will be expected to do anything but kick when he is pulled out of the line and sent back in punt formation, and the chances are both Georgetown and George Washington are preparing strategy which will employ Swett and Kopcik as decoys. Especially might trickery be effective on third down with the offensive team needing only a couple of yards for a first.

Kopcik Kicks May Decide

Kopcik, in Georgetown's four games to date, has split the punting with Lou Falcone, reserve sophomore quarterback, who also has proved an exceptionally long and accurate booter. But Falcone is used in the Hoya line-up only when Joe McFadden needs replacement and since McFadden is one of the team's most valuable players and now is recovered from a hip injury he probably will play the best part of 60 minutes against G. W. That would leave the bulk of the punting on Kopcik's broad brogans.

There may be another example of punting by a Georgetown lineman Saturday. Tackle Joe Daniels, whom Coach Jack Hagerty believes is the best all-around kicker on his squad, but who has not been punting for the same reason that G. W. hasn't called upon Swett—slowness in getting the ball away—may be a Georgetown surprise.

Like Swett, Daniels has been drilling faithfully to be able to kick on the first step, instead of requiring two. Lately he seems to have the hang of it. Not only can Daniels outpunt most of the other Georgetown players, but he also is the most accurate—in practice—at banging over place-kicks and even drop-kicks.

Daniels and Swett are alike in another way besides their unusual ability to kick. Both are now playing positions with which as freshmen they were totally unfamiliar.

Daniels Soon Shifted

Daniels came to Georgetown from Bloomfield, N. J., hailed as one of the greatest schoolboy ends seen there in recent years, but the Georgetown coaches saw him at more valuable tackle and therefore he was shifted to the latter position in 1938 spring practice. Although he never before had played a tackle, Daniels was a "natural." Tall and rugged and equipped with huge hands, he is one of the best defensive tackles in the District and improving rapidly as a blocker.

Swett was preceded to George Washington by reports that marked him as a great fullback. However, last year the Colonials found themselves without a dependable center and Swett seemed to fit the bill. Again this season Swett is at a position previously foreign to him.

Because Sophomore Mike Monchlovich appeared a fully adequate center and because the Colonials were short on guards, Swett moved over one position and once again has proved his versatility.

Army Sold Out Of Tickets for Irish Game Nov. 4

West Point, N. Y., Oct. 25.—With the placing in the mail of its entire allotment of half of the tickets to the Army-Notre Dame football game, to be played at Yanks Stadium on November 4, the Army Athletic Association tonight announced that no more tickets remain in its hands for sale.

Although the game was a sell-out many days ago, Army customarily holds all tickets for mailing simultaneously ten days before the game, seeking thus to reduce speculation.

District Women Golfers Beat Baltimore, 11-7

Mrs. Stern's 68 Sets New Course Mark

D. C. Team Scores, In Final Intercity Match of Season At Hillendale Club

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Baltimore, Oct. 25.—Mrs. Charlotte Stern posted a new unofficial women's course record over the Hillendale layout here today, the outstanding achievement of another Washington-Baltimore intercity match that found the Capital City girls posting their usual victory in the second half of the '39 home and home series.

Losing the majority of the points in only one of the six foursomes, Mrs. J. F. Dowdall's line-up won by an 11-7 margin and left their record at two victories, both over Baltimore, and a loss to Philadelphia for the year's play. The District team won, 15½ to 2½, in an earlier match at Manor.

Out in 38

Mrs. Stern, holing every putt, played the front nine in 38, including four pars on the starting holes, and was back in 40 for a 78, two strokes under Elizabeth Bonthron's 80, the previous record score. Mrs. Stern and Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor, won all 3 points, the only clean sweep for the D. C. team, over Mrs. Alex Gordon 3d and Mrs. Harry C. Trace.

The Indian Spring and Manor duo of Mrs. Betty Meckley and Marion Brown scored 2½ points over the first twosome of the hosts, Mrs. E. Boyd Morrow, seven-time State champion, and Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg, Baltimore City titleholder. They divided the point on the first nine, but Mrs. Meckley's consistent 81, aided by a birdie punch by Marion Brown on the fifteenth, gave the visitors a 1-up margin for the second nine. The winners had a best ball 77.

Mrs. Myron Davy parred the seventeenth hole and dropped a 10-foot downhill putt on the eighteenth to give her and Mrs. Walter Stokes the Mid-Atlantic champion, a 2½-to-½ victory over State Champion Mrs. Jerome Sloman and Mrs. M. Louise Bell, of Baltimore. The winners paired well, halving the match through the sixteenth hole with a sub-80 best ball.

Gain Even Break

Three down at the turn, Mrs. Leo Walper, the D. C. champion, and Mrs. Bishop Hill won all three holes back on the return trip, climaxed by Mrs. Walper's 4 on the eighteenth hole, the only one of the day, that assured a split of 3 points. A 5-foot putt, after a great approach, turned the trick.

Team Captain Mrs. Dowdall and her southpaw partner, Mrs. K. S. Giles, gained an even break with Mrs. W. Evans and Effie Bowes, the second split of the day. Mrs. R. Lester Rose and Mrs. H. J. Cooper, playing against the strong team of Mrs. M. Glick and Gladys Greiner, in the last match, dropped 3 points.

Mrs. Stern's chances for a record score were in danger when she knocked her tee shot on the short seventeenth over the green, but the Indian Spring representative chipped the ball in the cup for a birdie 2 and finished with a 5 for the 78. Mrs. Stern won low net in the field day on Tuesday and was tied for second low scorer in The Post Cup last week.

Washington, 11; Baltimore, 7

Mrs. Betty P. Meckley and Marion Brown (Washington) scored 2½ points to ½ for Mrs. E. Boyd Morrow and Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg (Baltimore).

Mrs. W. R. Stokes and Mrs. Myron Davy (Washington) scored 2½ points to ½ for Mrs. Jerome Sloman and Mrs. M. Louise Bell (Baltimore).

Mrs. Bishop Hill and Mrs. Leo Walper (Washington) scored 1½ points to 1½ for Mrs. J. W. F. Martin and Jeanette Myers (Baltimore).

Mrs. C. S. Stern and Mrs. L. G. Pray (Washington) scored 3 points to 0 for Mrs. Alex Gordon 3d and Mrs. Harry C. Trace (Baltimore).

Mrs. K. S. Giles and Mrs. J. F. Dowdall (Washington) scored 1½ points to 1½ for Mrs. William Evans and Effie Bowes (Baltimore).

Mrs. R. Lester Rose and Mrs. H. J. Cooper (Washington) scored 0 points to 3 for Mrs. M. Glick and Gladys Greiner (Baltimore).

Terps' Hopes Hinge On Stopping Soph Back, Bud Walton

The University of Florida football team which will invade College Park Saturday for a game featuring Maryland's homecoming day celebration will not lack for rooters, it was announced yesterday. Not only will the 'Gators band and local alumni turn out for the game but a special contingent of 35 students representing the "Gator Pep Club" will make the trip.

The Gator Pep Club has been setting the pace for student pep rallies for years but the Maryland game will mark their farthest jaunt in support of their team.

The Florida eleven, according to advices from Gainesville, is a stubborn defensive outfit but as in the past few years has not shown any great offensive power. Much of the success of their attack will depend on the throwing accuracy of a sophomore, Bud Walton, whose passing enabled the 'Gators to upset Boston College's hitherto undefeated team, 7-0, and led them to a victory over Tampa by the identical margin last week.

Landis Sanctions Tie-up Between A's and Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 25 (AP).—Toronto Baseball Club officials announced today that Connie Mack, owner and manager of the Philadelphia Athletics in the American League, had advised them the proposed working agreement between the Athletics and the local International League club had been sanctioned by Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, baseball's high commissioner.

At the same time Mack announced he was sending two players to Toronto. They are Jim Reninger and Eric Tipton, the latter an outfielder who joined the Athletics from Duke University last spring. Tipton will be here on option while Reninger, who won seven and lost seven at Baltimore last season, will come outright to the Leafs.

Bill Krywicki Rejoins Rams

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—Good news for Fordham came today when Bill Krywicki donned a uniform and rejoined the Rams for the first time since being injured in the game with Tulane nearly two weeks ago.

Along with Jim Noble, another convalescent, he is expected to be able to go into the backfield against Pitt's Panthers this week.

Skulls Seek Second

Ballston Skulls will be gunning for their second victory of the week tonight at Ballston Stadium when they oppose the A. B. Social Club at 8 o'clock.

Hader, Evans Renew 'Feud' On Wrestling Card Tonight

The first two-out-of-three fall match in the local wrestling ring in six years will be staged tonight at Turner's Arena when Jack Hader, the Kansas "hate-man," and Don Evans, Texas groan artist, will renew their "feud" for the third week in the headline match.

EVANS

Hader defeated Evans in the first match when the latter was disqualified for roughness. Last week Evans won the match twice, refused to accept the referee's verdict and finally was downed by Hader, who lured the unsuspecting Texan back into the ring with taunts.

A class B ringside riot has followed each Hader-Evans fiasco, usually with two or more seasoned spectators taking over the ring for a post-bout match. The usual dressing room brawl last week found Hader and Evans throwing chairs at each other for the better part of an hour, but the fans outside were more interested in the pandemonium created by a free-for-all. As a result, the police detail is expected to be strengthened tonight.

The supporting card, beginning at 8:30 p. m., brings together Hans Kampfer and Frank Brunowicz, John Katan and Raoul Lopez, Stanley Pinto and Ralph Garibaldi, and Able Coleman and Ed Newman.

Purdue Mentor Speaks Harshly Of Grid Referees

Pausing en route to San Francisco with his team for the game Saturday with Santa Clara, Elward commented:

"Sure we got a good team. But refereeing being what it is, what's the sense of working all year so some bloke can spoil everything you've done in an hour on Saturday?

"We should have beat Minnesota. We got a bad decision. Minnesota fumbled in midfield. Purdue recovered. One official pointed to the Purdue man. But the referee, who was 15 yards back of the play, insisted the ball was dead when fumbled. He gave it to Minnesota and Minnesota scored. The movies showed plainly it was our ball."

Sooner Eleven Best Balanced Team in Years

Different Backfield Man Sets Pace in Every Department

By the Associated Press

Norman, Okla., Oct. 25.—Like bicycles, tight-rope walkers and teeter-totters, the University of Oklahoma's unbeaten football team depends on balance to go places.

Not even the crack Sooner team of 1938—class of the Big Six and ranked fourth nationally at the end of the season—could match Coach Tom Stidham's 1939 outfit in magnificently balanced power.

Beryl Clark, who rode the bench for two seasons, is the most consistent ground-gainer, although Byron Potter, a sophomore, has the highest ball-carrying figures for a single game.

Passing Average Is "Tops"

Johnny Martin's passing average is tops. Orv Matthews, a sophomore whose chief weapon is speed, has developed into the best punter. L. G. Friedrichs, sophomore safety, leads in runback of punts.

Bill Jennings, junior back, has caught more passes than any of the ends. Dick Favor, blocking back, kicks the points after touchdown. Bob Seymour, senior fullback, shares the honor of scoring the most points with Clark.

Defensively, the Sooners were good enough to stop Northwestern at the 2-yard line twice and never have been behind in any of their four games to date, although four touchdowns have been scored against their reserves.

Punting Averages 43.5 Yards

Records of the Sooners' fumble-filled tie with Southern Methodist and their smashing victories over Northwestern, Texas and Kansas show only a slight advantage for Oklahoma in all statistics. But they have scored 81 points, while their opponents—some of whom outgained them on the ground or through the air—were working their heads off to collect 26.

With six different backs handling the kicking assignments, the Sooners have a punting average of 43.5 yards from the line of scrimmage on 39 punts in four games. That was figured after 20 yards had been lopped off of every punt that went over the goal line.

Favor, senior blocker, has kicked eight extra points in ten tries and has booted two field goals.

If the Sooners have a weakness, since Southern Methodist taught them to hold on to the ball, nobody has been able to find it. Perhaps that's why the experts rank them among the Nation's first ten.

Sir Douglas Wins At Field Trials

Injuries Hamper Navy Work for Clemson

Casualty List Outnumbers Varsity Squad

Majority of Regulars To Start Saturday Against Tigers; Line Suffers Weight Loss

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Oct. 25.—Coach Swede Larson may recommend that Navy give up varsity football and go in for wheelchair polo if the epidemic of injuries doesn't end soon at the Naval Academy.

The casualty list is bigger than the varsity squad, and that game with the rough, tough Clemson boys is only three days away.

Only a few of the injuries are serious, and most of the regulars are expected to get in the game Saturday, but their minor hurts have kept them from practice.

Too, the replacements for the injured men are much smaller, and cut the squad's tonnage down from battleship to approximately destroyer—or frying—size.

Patchwork Quilt Effect

Dick Foster, 165, replaced Swede Hansen, 227, at end, for a net loss of 62 pounds. Line avoirdupois dropped another 55 pounds when Joe Sliwka, 170, went in for Tom McGrath, 225, at one guard.

Other line replacements were Al Feldmeier, 180, for Bex Trimble, 205, guard, and Johnny Schmitz, 170, for Lou Burke, 190, end.

Capt. Al Bergner and Dick Opp, tackles, and Hal Harwood, center, were the only regular starters running with the first string tonight.

Line to Be Intact

The injured linemen were expected to be ready for Clemson, but the Swede worried because they are missing so much vital practice.

The backfield problem is still tough, with Emmett Wood and Butch Werner definitely out, and the rest of the crew looking as if they'd traded punches with an air raid.

Only one of five right halfbacks was adjudged seaworthy enough for practice tonight. Cliff Lenz, Lou Mayo, Earl Rowse and Werner are all limping. Werner was not even in suit. Casey Beers, good offensively, but weak on defense, was in first-class shape. How much service Lenz, Mayo and Rowse will see Saturday is problematical, Larson said.

C. U.'s Unbeaten Football Cardinals Entrain for Miami

Baugh Primed For Packers' Tilt Sunday

Special Dispatch to The Post

Milwaukee, Oct. 25.—They're going to take the blankets off Sammy Baugh on Sunday and see what can be done about beating the Green Bay Packers, who are 7 to 5 favorites to whip Washington's Redskins in the National Football League.

Absent from the Redskins' last three games save for one punting appearance at Pittsburgh, Slingin' Sammy has been brought along slowly by Head Coach Ray Flaherty with Sunday's game in mind, and with reason.

Despite the fact that Frank Filchock's passing and the running of Andy Farkas, Jimmy German and Dick Todd have carried the Redskins to three straight victories, Flaherty believes the Redskins present their strongest front only when Baugh is in the game.

With all due respect to Filchock and German, Flaherty rates Baugh the superior passer, and is impressed with Slingin' Sammy's ability to cmopete a pass when the Redskins are in need, as he has often done in the past.

The development of Farkas and German as ball carriers has been a happy event for the Redskins, who can now present a more diversified attack. The threat of Baugh's passing is expected to loosen the Green Bay defense for the Redskin's running game, which is approaching the strength it boasted when Cliff Battles was with the club.

The Redskins worked out on a slushy field today, encountering the wintry weather they were warned about in this vicinity. Eager to retain his squad in the same fine physical condition it now owns, Flaherty has scheduled no scrimmages for the week.

Pass defense again today continued to be the chief concern of Coach Flaherty, who was considerably miffed by the shoddy play of the Redskins against the Pittsburgh air attack last week. He has warned his athletes that in Arnold Herbery and Cecil Isbell the Packers boast a pair of passers better than they met at Pittsburgh.

Indians to Open Strenuous Schedule Against Middies

By the Associated Press

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 25.—North Carolina State and Virginia Military Institute are listed on the nine-game football schedule which the College of William and Mary will play in 1940.

The schedule, released by Carl Voyles, director of athletics at the Williamsburg institution, will be the most strenuous the Indians have attempted in several years.

From the opening game, which is scheduled with Navy on Saturday, September 28, through finals with the University of Richmond on Thanksgiving Day, the schedule offers few, if any, soft touches for the revived Indians.

The schedule:

September 28—Navy at Annapolis.
October 5—Apprentices at Newport News or Williamsburg, site pending.
October 12—V. P. I. at Richmond.
October 19—Hampden-Sydney at home.
October 26—Virginia at Norfolk or Williamsburg, site pending.
November 2—V. M. I. at Lexington.
November 9—Randolph-Macon at home.
Thanksgiving Day—Richmond at Richmond.

There is a possibility that William and Mary will play one of its pending games in Portsmouth's new stadium.

Texas Tech Drills En Route East

Kansas City, Oct. 24 (AP).—Twenty-eight Red Raiders from Texas Tech raced through their plays in a two-hour workout today, which broke up the long journey from Lubbock to Pittsburgh, Pa., where Duquesne will be met Friday night.

The workout was conducted in 84-degree temperature. Coach Pete Cawthorn believes his injured players will be in shape by Friday night for the third annual game between the two teams, but said his 1938 squad was weaker than that of 1938.

After the Pittsburgh contest, the Raiders move on to Florida for a struggle with the University of Miami, November 3.

Undefeated Season Hope of Notre Dame

'May Have Fair Club,' Irish Coach Says After 4 Straight Victories; First Perfect Slate Since 1930 Goal

South Bend, Ind., Oct. 25.—Notre Dame, a football team with plenty of class "in the clutch," apparently has its sights on its first undefeated season since 1930.

A month ago the Irish were rated little chance of going through a nine-game program as difficult as any encountered by a major school eleven.

Coach Elmer Layden wasn't outwardly pessimistic, but as he looked ahead to games with Purdue, Georgia Tech and Southern Methodist he was worried about several things—particularly the lack of experienced reserves.

Today, Notre Dame has four straight victories to its credit, all at the expense of strong teams. And the manner in which the Irish have improved from week to week indicates Layden has the kind of a club he likes—one with ability to learn from experience and enough spirit to fight its way out of any kind of a hole.

"Our passing offense could stand much improvement," Layden said today. "Once we can get our aerial attack to clicking we should be a much better all-around team. The reserves looked better against Navy than they did against Southern Methodist, but our downfield blocking was not particularly good. The team as a whole is getting better, however, and in a few weeks we may have a fair club."

Notre Dame now has a running attack good enough to trouble the best line in the Nation. It gained 419 yards in 66 plays in the Irish victory over Navy. In addition, the Notre Dame "Torpedo," Little Ben Sheridan, showed the form which made him a star last year, galloping 27 yards for a touchdown on the opening play of the second period to climax a 79-yard Irish march.

In four games the Irish, however, have completed only 8 of 26 forward passes for an average of .308. But the Irish have an excellent receiver in Bill Kerr and a good passer in Bob Saggau, and the of these Saturdays Notre Dame's overhead game may click.

Notre Dame meets Carnegie Tech next Saturday and then has games with Army, Iowa, Northwestern and Southern California. That's a big assignment, but on past performance this 1939 Irish squad has a bright chance of taking its place alongside that great unbeaten 1930 team—the last one coached by the immortal Knute Rockne.

Tech Head Indorses Hardell Fete

Collection for Trophy Approved by Daniels; Frosh Tilt at Stadium

The football testimonial to be given Elmer (Hap) Hardell jointly by Tech High School, where he formerly was football and track coach, and Georgetown, where he now is freshman grid mentor, was lent impetus yesterday by the indorsement of Frank Daniels, Tech principal.

Daniels approved a collection of quarters, dimes and nickles among students for purchase of a trophy to be presented to Hardell tomorrow afternoon at Griffith Stadium when his Hoya frosh meet cubs from George Washington in a game starting at 2:30.

Daniels will be unable to atttend to personally make the presentation, but he is sending as his substitute, Le Roy (Doc) Burch, a faculty member and a former teacher of Hardell. Simultaneously Harold Treskunoff, sports writer for Tech Life, will give Hardell a scroll embellished with the names of the entire Tech studen body and of Francis (Reds) Daly, Georgetown varsity end, who attended Tech and played with one of Hardell's last elevens there.

The frosh game itself will involve two of the strongest yearling elevens ever to represent their respective schools. Georgetown will display outstanding players in Ross P. Sorce, 270-pound tackle; Mickey Ford, triple-threat back from Baltimore City College, and Chris Pavich, a small but brilliant end.

G. W.'s freshmen, coached by Ray Hanken, former star end with the Colonials and later with the New York Giants, will present in Scott (Slick) Gudmunsen, an exceptionally good quarterback.

St. Louis Purchases Redskin Player

St. Louis, Oct. 25 (AP).—The punchless St. Louis Gunners, who have not scored in their last two games, announced today they had signed Tony Ippolito, fullback at Purdue last season, and had obtained Hal Bradley, an end, from the Washington Redskins.

The Gunners, member of the American Pro Football League, released another player, Sandy Sandberg, veteran tackle. Eight others were let out yesterday in a general shakeup of the squad.

Two Miami Gridders Suspended

'Celebrating' Triumph Draws Week's Sentence For Catholic U. Foes

Special Dispatch to The Post

Miami, Fla., Oct. 25.—Two members of the Miami football squad, which meets Catholic University here Friday night, have been suspended for breaking training, Head Coach Jack Harding announced today.

The players are Joe Dixon, regular center, and Ed Cameron, reserve guard. From what meager information gleaned on the Miami campus, it was learned the pair were set down for "celebrating" the Hurricanes' victory over Rollins College last week. The suspension will be for one week, which means both will miss the C. U. game.

Dixon is the boy who intercepted a pass tossed by Burke Vidnovic two years ago and ran 95 yards for a touchdown when Miami routed the Cardinals, 21 to 0. Determined to spoil Catholic's perfect record, Harding has been driving his charges hard all week.

Realtor Eleven To Meet 'Jacks'

The Murray Realtors will travel to Baltimore Sunday to play the strong Milburn Blackjack eleven, independent champions of Maryland. The game is scheduled for 2:30 p. m. at the Brooklyn Stadium.

All Murray players are requested to meet at the Johnson Playground at 12 o'clock before leaving for the game.

Post Grid Contest Entrants Face Tough Time This Week

Maybe you think picking football winners is a cinch—if so, the sixth weekly grid contest of The Washington Post should be your meat. The five best selectors, along with all ties, will get a pair of tickets apiece to the Georgetown University-West Virginia game November 4 at Griffith Stadium.

With 16 of the toughest games on the Nation's card on this week's list, a selection of 13 or possibly 14 winners should draw down a pair of the tickets. In case of tie games, the best picker will have even less correct.

Remember the rules, printed in agate type below. Deadline for entries is 11:01 Friday this week. Check the school you think'll be the winner, put name and address in the space below, and The Post Contest Editor will do the rest.

Bull Whip Beats Up the Creek by Head in Laurel Feature

Foul Claim Disallowed By Stewards

Son of Bull Dog Pays $7.50 Mutuel; Grandever Runs Third in Feature

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 25.—Bull Whip, a son of Bull Dog and with courage to justify the name, cracked down with blinding speed today to win the fifth race, a grade C handicap affair that was the best offering on the eight-race program. Not only did Bull Whip win the race on the track, but he also was triumphant in the Steward's box. Up the Creek, of the Milky Way Farms' entry, was second by a head in the battle over a route of a mile and a sixteenth and Apprentice Wallace, who had this mount claimed a foul against Jockey Maurice Peters who rode the winner.

After hearing both sides of the story, the officials allowed the placing to stand and there was a $7.50 mutuel awaiting backers of Bull Whip under the stands. The Brandywine Stable colorbearer, was clocked in 1:46 1-5. Third money in the field went to Grandever. The crowd of 8,000 played the Milky Way Farm entry of Up the Creek and No Competition as if the race had already been run. The entry riders probably had instructions for No Competition to run Bull Whip in the ground and for Up the Creek to come from behind.

This was what they tried to do, but Bull Whip had too much speed and endurance for the pair. No Competition and Bull Whip ran head and head for more than a half-mile, with Bull Whip winning this tussle. Then Wallace brought Up the Creek along on the outside, and it appeared that this colt, also a son of Bull Dog, would down his rival. Up the Creek got up to within a neck of the lead, but there he stayed. He could not gain thereafter while Peters was pumping with all his might on Bull Whip. The two horses were lapped on each other, and Wallace's foul claim was believed to be based on close riding.

There was another claim of fo.l in the fourth race. Jockey Alfred Robertson, aboard Glorious Time, did the complaining in this instance against Apprentice Charlie Friedman, who piloted Domkin home in front. Domkin appeared to have carried Glorious Time wide. Robertson snatched up his mount and came to the inside. As in the other case, the stewards let the positions stand. Domkin paid $9 after running the 6 furlongs in a creditable 1:13.

The daily double payoff was $32.70 on the combination of eight and two. The start of the race was bad. Nansemond, the favorite, broke first, but Apprentice Wallace apparently thought it was "no go." for he took up. He got his mount going quickly, however, to take the lead. Blablah, of half-mile fame, displaced him early and then went on to win.

Sicilia to Box Dano Monday

Armando Sicilia, Chicago Italian featherweight, was signed yesterday to meet Pablo Dano, Filipino veteran, in the eight-round main event Monday night at Turner's Arena. Dano, in his last appearance here about three months ago, took a decision over Al Mancini, well-known New York puncher.

Dano has been fighting in the East for two years and holds victories over such top-flight fighters as Midget Wolgast, Frankie Kid Covelli and Speedy Dado on the West Coast. His latest exploit was a ten-round victory over Nat Liftin Monday night in New York. Sicilia is remembered here for his fights with Lou Gevinson, Tony Dupre and Abe Daner.

O'Hara Served Writ In 10,000 Suit

Providence, R. I., Oct. 25 (AP).—Walter E. O'Hara, former managing director of Narragansett Race Track, was served with a writ today in a $10,000 suit filed against him by Attorney Thomas J. McGauley "for legal and political services" rendered since March, 1928, including the period when O'Hara was campaigning for Governor.

O'Hara, appointing Attorney Walter I. Sundlin to represent him, termed the suit "too absurd for comment." A garnishee writ against O'Hara's funds in the Providence National Bank also was served. The declaration in the suit will be filed in Superior Court November 25.

Laurel Selections

Dear Al:

Regardless of the number of starters in the Pimlico Special next Wednesday, there will be betting only on the win position. There is no award for second in the event and no reason that a horse should be ridden out if he cannot win, so rather than risk criticism the Maryland Jockey Club has made the announcement well in advance. Attention, Laurel's track superintendent too many horses have been breaking down over your track. Can't we do something about that? Other reports to the contrary, Jockey George Woolf will be in Challedon's saddle in the Pimlico Special and he will be the regular rider of the W. L. Brann ace from now on. I understand that Johnny Adams will pilot Kayak II in the big race. Russell Oakes, of the Racing Form, came down from New York to see his first Maryland racing since he took over his new job. Art Brown, who is helping me to try to find my brother's cat, comes out to the track daily trying to find the right dog. The verse on the posters at Brooke Johns' barn are becoming so popular that he is being asked to compose jingles for other stables. He has a masterpiece on Sun Egret. I wonder if there is any truth in the rumor that Last Revue turned down an invitation to the Pimlico Special. Lorenzo Del Riccio, inventor of the photo chart used at Pimlico, has arrived at the Baltimore track and he is plenty sore about the war. He was in England when hostilities began and was about to install his camera at six tracks over there. Racing stopped and his machines were not needed. Frank Garrett, who usually winters his horses in Maryland, will keep some of them in action this winter. He will race them in California. Perhaps this means that Howard Bruce's General Mowlee will be sent after the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap.

BILL.

First race—Radiogram, in the second of two starts at Detroit this spring was runnerup to Domkin in a stake. Displaying a tendency to come from behind, the Dixiana youngster should be up for the verdict. Grey Wolf turned in a creditable effort behind Abrasion last start and should supply chief contention among these platers. Eight Rolls drops down; has a chance.

Second race—Water Cracker, has the speed to whip these better grade platers despite his poor showing last out. This youngster held his own in stakes all summer in New York. Charitable has early speed and may hold out to garner second money. Ted Briar is in clever hands and is reported training well.

Third race—Setemup, showed even effort with similar company last start with Duncan riding. Switching to the more seasoned Wallace today and with an off track possibility, he gets a high figure. Shalako looms as chief contender off his good race last week. Spartan Lady has the class to take care of the others.

Fourth race—Last Message, closed willingly behind Roar and Prarie Dog Monday. Running back with a field of similar quality, she may get up for a score. Indomitable was a disappointment last week but is capable of better effort. Dr. Whinny has the speed to go to the front but usually stops.

Fifth race—Be Blue, a winner of his last two heats in fast time, meets the same horses today and, showing improvement daily, should prove equal for his third straight. Allegro, beaten a head by the top horse last outing, had no excuse and figures next best. Bill Farnsworth can do better than shown in late races.

Sixth race — Connie Plaut, has been knocking on the door racing among better grade platers. She is well placed in this heat and with the proper ride should win. Miss Gino indicated speed in her last but is a maiden. Pomary finished close up behind Tuleyries in last start and may be dangerous in this company.

Seventh race—Sneaky Henry was not impressive last start but in a previous race took a three-length beating from Teddy's Girl in fast time. A similar effort here would win. Dissembler could offer strong contention despite his high weight. Waugh Pop accounted for his last heat but picks up top weight in this field.

Evening Light Wins 'Gansett Feature Race

Carence Runs Second In Cape Cod Purse; Red War Is Third

By the Associated Press

Pawtucket, R. I., Oct. 25.—J. M. Webb's Evening Light triumphed in her first effort of the current Narragansett Park meeting today, winning the $1,200 Cape Cod Purse, 6 furlongs for 3-year-olds, after two defeats at Rockingham.

Evening Light won her last two starts here before departing for Rockingham Park at Salem, N. H., and raced right back to that earlier form by defeating Mrs. W. Plunket Stewart's Carence by half a length. Two and a half lengths back of Carence was Red War, with the favored War Streak, owned by J. Kelly, running fourth.

Evening Light, the light weight on the field, was away fast, and after a slight challenge from Carence pulled away to a lead which she never relinquished.

Down the back stretch, Tommy May sent Red War up with the other two and they ran almost side by side to the far turn. From the quarter pole home, however, the order never changed, with Evening Light out front, Carence second and Red War third.

As Evening Light and Carence pulled away from the others on the home stretch, War Streak and Broad Tail moved up on Red War so that the judges called for a picture. Red War had only a nose on War Streak, who was but a head in front of Broad Tail.

The winner's time was 1:12 2-5 and she paid $6.80, $4.20 and $2.60. Carence paid $10.20 and $3.80 and Red War returned $3.40.

Canzoneri to Quit If Davis Beats Him

Fight in New York Next Week to Decide Tony's Ring Future

By the Associated Press

Marlboro, N. Y., Oct. 25.—Tony Canzoneri has about decided to stop kidding himself.

The grand little guy who has been fighting since the mid-'20s said today his bout in Madison Square Garden a week from tonight with Al Davis, a youngster from Brooklyn, will decide his ring future. If he wins, Tony will keep right on going; if Davis whips him—well, Tony has decided to hang 'em up for good.

"Tony doesn't need a horse to kick him in the face," was the way his manager, Sammy Goldman, explained it here at the Canzoneri farm and training quarters.

"He'll be ready for Davis, you can be sure of that. So everything hangs on that fight."

Of course, fighters, like women, always reserve the right to change their minds, so maybe Tony will feel differently the night after he takes tea with young Davis—win, lose or draw. But right now the little Louisiana larruper, who came out of the South to win the world featherweight, lightweight and junior welterweight championships, has his mind made up.

For a couple of years now, Tony's closest friends have been telling him it's time to call a halt. Since he lost the 135-pound crown in 1936 to his former sparring partner, Lou Ambers, and followed that up by receiving a sound whipping from Jimmy McLarnin, Tony's pals have been on him to get out before the "bells start to ring." Tony hasn't listened to them.

However, in the last year, two or three fighters whom he probably would have belted clear out of the park in his heyday have been tagging him. Two, Eddie Brink and Eddie Zivic, have beaten him. Maybe that had something to do with it.

Anyway, the ring will lose one of its finer citizens when Tony goes. He made his first big splurge on Bash boulevard way back in 1928 when he took the featherweight championship from Benny Bass. He lost the 126-pound honors late the same year to Andre Routis, but stepped up to win the lightweight crown from Al Singer with a one-round knockout in 1930. Barney Ross beat him for the title in '33, but back came Tony to reclaim the crown by defeating Ambers in an elimination after Ross had to quit the division because of weight-making difficulties.

Miss Wootton Rolls 376 Set In D. C. League

Rosslyn Star Paces Team to Sweep Over Arcadia Ladies

Blanche Wootan rolled a 376 set for Rosslyn in the Ladies District League last night to lead the team to a clean sweep over Arcadia. Rosslyn had a 542 game and 1,609 set.

Arcadia-Pontiac swept three games from Red Circle with Mabelle Herring best with a 128 game and 366 set. The best team game was a 557 for the winners. The matches were at Arcadia and Lucky Strike.

ARCADIA

Tom Kennedy had a 143 game and 368 set for Tornadoes in the Dynamite League at Arcadia, while the team copped honors for the night with 579 and 1,616.

SILVER SPRING

George Mellington was high man in the Friendship League at Silver Spring, posting a 390 set and 147 game, and leading his Wakefield Dairy team to high game and set for the night, of 622-1,692.

LUCKY STRIKE

With the same ruthless pin-smashing with which it has held the District Grocery Stores League lead since the start of the season, Wardman Park Market pounded out a 3-game victory over Sunsweet. The victors rolled high set of 1,853, though Maxwell House two game honors, 578, and Jack Harris, of the Orange and Black five, registered 155 and 373 for other awards.

Mary Balaguer, of General Council No. 1, featured Ladies Commissioners and Miscellaneous League, rolling high game of 137 and set of 352. Personal, leading the league, had 577 and 1,522 for team game and set, at the same time winning three straight from Accounts and Collections.

A 129 game by Ann Williams, of Unity, paced Eastern Star rolling, as Lebanon's Constance Torrey rolled set of 322, and Washington Centennial swept other honors with 516 and 1,515.

Best individual game in the Lucky Strike Ladies League went to Margaret Smoot, a 125. Up-N-At-Em continued in the league lead with three games over Federal Security, rolling high team set of 1,452. Commerce five had 501 for team game, and Helen Pike and June Fisher tied for individual set, each with 311.

QUEEN PIN

Vince Polvinale's 160-397 set the pace for the Square Deal, aided greatly by Elmer Wesley's 357. Capt. Reznick's 124-341 was best for the losing Bantam Pressman in the Southeast League.

Paced by Joe Langford's 150 and Herbert Young's 380, Maryland Market eked out a 2-to-1 win over Bacas Bros.

Brad Manley's initial appearance in the Southeast League was no handicap to the City Baking Co. with a 148 game and 378 set to pace his team to take two games from Stephanson's Bakery. Jim Chakel's 363 helped Brad considerably.

Little Hoyas Prep For Landon Game

The same trouble that plagues coaches of greater experience—injuries—has descended on Coach Tommy Keating at Georgetown Prep as he prepares for his third outing as a coach Friday against Landon at Bethesda.

Three solid performers on the Little Hoya string—Capt. Chuck Devine, end; Roger Goodspeed, 210-pound tackle, and Bud Eckrich, plunging back—are on the sick list and their ability to start against the brown-clad Landoners is problematic. Devine and Eckrich were unable to see action against Charlotte Hall last week as Prep wrung out its second victory of the season, though they may be ready for duty this week. Goodspeed, too, has been called almost ready by Coach Keating.

Light drills have been the order of things so far this week, as Keating lessened the chances of further injuries. He has especially pointed his defense at Landon's triple-threat back, Amusson.

The policy of the Annapolis institution in recent years has been to meet an Ivy League opponent in this city each year, and on alternate years games have been played with Notre Dame as well. Penn is met annually in Philadelphia, a contest of more than 50 years' in history.

Michigan Works On Pass Defense

Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 25 (AP).—Michigan's football team, preparing for Yale, worked on pass defense today on a theory expounded by Coach Fritz Crisler, to wit:

"Yale will keep pitching passes at one spot, usually short, over-the-line heaves, as a build-up for a long shot."

Dave Strong, playing the role of Yale's Fred Burr, had trouble getting any success with passes, and the Wolverines also easily stopped Yale ground plays as demonstrated by reserves.

Chicago, Oct. 25 (AP).—Coach Clark Shaughnessy sent three Chicago varsity elevens through their heaviest scrimmage of the season against the freshmen today. The Maroons concentrated on offense, particularly running plays. Idle this week, Chicago plays at Virginia November 4.

Preventive Case Work Urged Here

Report Decries Removal Of Children From Home As Solution of Problem

The tendency in the District to solve children's problems by taking them away from their homes, instead of providing more preventive case work and more funds for keeping families together, was decried by Miss Mildred Terrett, executive of the Children's Protective Association, in her annual report yesterday.

"A city which habitually offers to all types of children's problems the solution of taking them away from home, is a city that has something wrong with its social thinking or with its social mechanisms or with both," she declared at the annual meeting which preceded "open house" for the Community Chest's "Go and See" tour to the headquarters, 1907 S street northwest.

Miss Terrett pointed out that the District has "almost twice as many children being cared for by public and private agencies away from their own families as is the average in other comparable cities." The ratio is about 44 children in 10,000 in the District, compared with 23 in other cities, she said.

Ample Funds Emphasized

"The first great need in the child welfare field in Washington, she continued, "is to have trained case workers at points where the first signs of disturbance in children's behavior or family relationships become evident.

"The second great need is that the funds allocated to the keeping of children and their parents together . . . should be much more ample and they should be administered with more elasticity.

"In the public field, the lack of protective case work services to children has been almost complete," she stated.

"Let us do what we can," she urged, "to secure for the Board of Public Welfare additional appropriations from Congress so that it may, in accordance with the terms of the recent Kepecs recommendations, greatly enlarge facilities for protective work and may increase the personnel of the Aid for Dependent Children Department." Enlarged contributions to the Community Chest would also aid this work, she pointed out.

The association, which served 646 children last year, is "receiving more than twice as many requests for service as it can give," she said. "We are therefore this year asking the Chest not only for added workers but also for a very much increased boarding fund," she said.

Seven members of the board of directors, whose terms expire this year, were reelected to a three-year term. They are Mrs. David S. Barry, Mrs. Frederick M. Bradley, Fernando Cuniberti, Mrs. Peyton Hawes Dunn, Mrs. Walter S. Ufford, Mrs. R. Thomas West, Herbert S. Wood. Mrs. William Hurd Hill, president of the board, presided at the meeting.

"Go and See" days also will be held today at the Washington Society for the Hard of Hearing, 1116 Vermont avenue northwest, from 4 to 6 p. m., and at Southwest Community House, for colored children, at 501 Second street southwest, from 4 to 6. Instruments to improve hearing will be on display at the former and will be demonstrated.

In suburban Washington, "Go and See" day will be held at Prince Georges Health Center, 29 Park avenue, Hyattsville, Md., from 7 to 10 p. m. Visitors also will be welcomed at the Instructive Visiting Nurse Association of Arlington County, Va., Wilson boulevard and North Bolton street, 3 to 5 p. m.

FCC Hits Radio Station Control By Mortgage

WMCA Exonerated Of Sending Secret War Communications

By James D. Secrest.

The Federal Communications Commission yesterday struck a blow at mortgage control of broadcasting stations and at the same time exonerated Station WMCA, New York, of illegally broadcasting secret communications of British and German naval authorities at the outbreak of the European war.

The commission also granted a Washington radio firm authority to construct a high frequency broadcasting station at Bethesda, Md. The firm is McNary & Chambers. High frequency broadcasting, while still in an experimental stage, is hailed by radio experts as a highly promising field of high fidelity transmission.

The license of Station WSAL, Salisbury, Md., was revoked by the FCC and hearings were scheduled on renewal of licenses of two other stations on the ground that they were controlled by a Washington radio engineer, Glenn D. Gillett, in violation of the communications act.

Gillett was said to have obtained control of the stations by purchasing mortgages on them. He failed, however, to have the stations transferred legally to him by FCC approval of the deals.

Simultaneous with the revocation of the WSAL license, Frank M. Stearns, its operator, filed an application to assign the permit to the Eastern Shore Broadcasting Co.

The two other stations said by the FCC to be controlled by Gillett through mortgage holdings are WBAK, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and WQDM, St. Albans, Vt. Both were granted temporary license renewals pending hearings.

Stearns was said by the FCC "to have made false and fraudulent statements" with regard to the station's financing, equipment and ownership.

The Bethesda high frequency radio station will be located at 4713 Hampden lane, and construction will begin immediately.

Transmission will be on 42,000 cycles, in the ultrahigh frequency band, with 100 watts power. As the ordinary receiver is equipped to tune in stations in the regular long wave band and short waves used in international broadcasting, McNary & Chambers will have to install sets in Washington homes to test reception.

Experiments now being conducted in the New York and New Jersey areas by Maj. Edwin Armstrong, noted radio engineer, indicate that the ultrahigh frequencies may become the customary broadcasting waves of the future.

Joseph Saks, Son of Merchant, Dies in New York

Joseph Saks, 63, son of the founder of the Washington Loan & Trust Co. and the Washington branch of Saks & Co., died yesterday at his country home in Elberton, N. J.

He was a native of Washington and moved from the District many years ago. He helped found Saks Fifth Avenue, in New York.

The only son of Isadore Saks, he was graduated from Emerson Institute here and Princeton University. He was a charter member of the University Club in Washington and a member of the Princeton Club and the Lambs Club in New York.

Surviving are his wife, two daughters in New York, and his uncle, Col. Joseph M. Heller, M. R. C., U. S. A., of 1746 K street northwest.

Services will be held tomorrow at Temple Emanuel in New York. Burial will be in Cypress Hills Cemetery.

Mrs. Pasternak, Wife of Tailor, Dies Here at 57

Mrs. Sarah Pasternak, wife of Harry Pasternak, Washington tailor, died yesterday of a heart attack at her home, 5108 Forty-first street northwest. She was 57.

Born in New York City, Mrs. Pasternak came to Washington some years after her marriage. Surviving are her husband and two sons, Dr. Jerome Alfred Pasternak and Samuel Robert Pasternak, all of 5108 Forty-first street northwest.

Services will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow in Danzansky's Chapel, 3501 Fourteenth street northwest. Burial will follow in Adas Israel Congregation Cemetery.

Jitterbugs Dance Tonight At Auto Show

3 Couples to Perform Nightly Until Final Contest Saturday

The first round in the "rug-cutting and jitterbugging" contest at the Auto Show will be held at 9:30 tonight in Riverside Stadium, Twenty-sixth street between Constitution avenue and D street northwest.

Three couples will perform each night until Saturday, when each winning team will stage a final performance for the grand prize. About 30 couples already have entered, and eliminations will be held at 3:30 p. m. every day, Henry C. Stephenson, jr., announced yesterday. The two couples eliminated each night will receive consolation prizes.

J. B. Wagstaff, general sales manager of the De Soto Corporation, yesterday said that "every indication points to great sales this year in the automobile industry." He said the show "ranks far ahead of any show that has been put on here for years and is one of the most beautiful I've seen."

Miss Margaret R. Hackett yesterday continued to lead in the contest for Queen of the Auto Show with 4,985 votes. Other leaders included Miss Jeanette Clawson, with 3,195 votes; Miss Sylvia Abramson, with 2,150; Miss Ruth Brown, 1,950; Miss Sylvia Wilkinson, 1,895, and Miss Geraldine DeFoe, 1,755.

Wash Gas Light Stock Is Held In 39 States

Company Reports The Result of the Recent Distribution

The Washington Gas Light Co. filed yesterday, with the Public Utilities Commission, a list of the holders of the company's common stock, which shows the result of the distribution of the stock last August. At that time the Washington and suburban companies, which had owned the majority of the gas company's common stock for the last 10 years, offered its holdings of 362,588 shares for sale to the general public through a group of 35 underwriters, including several local investment banking houses.

There are now 1,484 holders of common stock in Washington and its vicinity, compared with 308 previously reported. There are 115,656 shares owned in the Washington area, accounting for 27 per cent of the total common stock outstanding. This is in addition to 35,600 shares of preferred stock, almost all of which is owned by local investors.

The sale of the stock did not represent any new financing by the Gas company, but only a change of ownership and the relinquishment of holding company control by Washington and suburban companies.

Average Holding 90 shares

The stockholders list is as of October 14, and shows a total of 3,966 stockholders, in comparison with 507 common stockholders reported at the end of last year. It indicates that Washington and suburban companies still own 66,499 shares, as against 327,588 shares owned prior to the divestment proceedings. Exclusive of the block remaining in the hands of Washington and suburban companies, the total common stock outstanding is 358,501 shares, an average holding of about 90 shares for each stockholder.

About 30 per cent of the common stock is now held by New York and New England investors, and the remainder of the stock has been widely distributed, 39 States being represented in the list.

Institutional Buyers

Insurance companies have purchased 14,150 shares of the common stock, and educational, religious and social service institutions hold 10,244 shares. There are 124 holdings by trustees and administrators of estates, comprising 25,182 shares. Approximately 1,945 stockholders are women, holding an aggregate of 126,562 shares.

Among the larger stockholders are Harvard College, 5,000 shares; the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., 3,000; the Home Insurance Co., 2,000, and the Hardware Mutual Insurance Co. of Minnesota, 2,050. Except for the block of stock remaining in the hands of the Washington and suburban companies, the largest single holding is approximately 1 per cent of the total voting stock outstanding. An analysis of the geographical distribution follows:

Annuity Policies Reach All-Time Peak of 1,500,000

New York, Oct. 25.—Annuity contracts in force in the United States have now risen to a new all-time high of approximately 1,500,000, calling ultimately for the disbursement of approximately $550,000,000 a year, it was announced yesterday by the Annual Message of Life Insurance Committee.

"Actual payments were made by the life insurance companies on more than 300,000 annuity contracts in 1938, the aggregate exceeding $412,000,000, an increase of approximately 12 per cent as compared with 1937 and the largest total of disbursements in American history.

"These payments in many instances provided the sole means of support for the recipients and in others afforded important supplemental income," according to Joseph C. Behan, chairman of the Annual Message of Life Insurance Committee.

"The writing of annuity contracts has become a major activity of American life insurance companies only during recent years, although life insurance originated as an annuity plan and the earliest contracts were usually annuities. In England, where life insurance was first developed, the people have long been annuity conscious but in this country, with its groader opportunities for achieving financial independence, people did not until recently feel the same need for thus securing income for old age."

Industrial Stocks Hit New Highs Steels and Motors the Favorites Large Orders Received for War Needs

New York, Oct. 25.—Industrial shares rose to new highs for the year today on a wave of new buying which developed about halfway through the session and gathered momentum to a strong close. Gains in pivotals, natobly war stocks, ranged from 1 to 4 points with total volume of 1,691,200 shares, the largest in a week. Steels and motors were particularly buoyant and the independent aircraft division again recorded a new peak price level. Store issues extended recent gains; amusements joined the parade, but oils, foods and rail equipments held back. Carrier shares were supported, going ahead in spite of the Government's antitrust proceeding against 236 roads in the A. A. R.

Ticker Falls Behind

The demand for stocks was touched off by a few large orders for steel, munitions, aircrafts and other descriptions which have been prominent all along. As prices started to rise the day-to-day element stepped from the sidelines and in the last hour demand was so brisk that tickers fell slightly behind the actual transactions on the floor. Brokers attributed the spurt to a variety of reasons. The war argument for buying equities was strengthened by Germany's "fight it out" attitude, exemplified in the Von Ribbentrop speech of the previous day; opinions expressed in semiofficial Nazi newspapers that "the day has come" to bomb England, and by apparent intensification of commerce raiding by U-boats and battlecraft.

On the home front war issues were again emphasized. There was an unusually large crop of reports or estimates of the volume of orders which Britain and France will place in the United States. As soon as Congress changes the neutrality act sufficiently, guards were doubled on French and British ocean liners at New York piers, as sabotage plots were rumored. Official figures showed some $79,000,000 business in firearms and munitions canceled in September, due to the existing neutrality law provisions.

Steel Demand

The Iron Age survey of the steel industry aided the buying side. The magazine estimated that very little of the current output of steel products is being added to inventory, and reported that a secondary buying movement for first-quarter delivery is already under way, despite the natural consumer hesitation in placing contracts before definite price announcements are made. Meanwhile, the British interests which recently sought about 2,000,000 tons of steel, mostly semifinished, in this market and were unable to get together with United States producers on price, were said to be ready to resume negotiations.

Mixed in with the war developments, industrial news which included favorable earnings and increased volume, was a recurrence of inflation gossip. This probably arose from prominence given to Government expense and spending policies by speakers at the annual New York Herald Tribune forum, as well as by figures on the current Federal deficit. For the first four months of the national fiscal year the Treasury spent $1,354,432,109 more than it took in and at the end of the period the United States debt was about $2,500,000,000 higher than a year ago at a new high of nearly $41,000,000,000. This, of course, is exclusive of huge guarantees for so-called New Deal "self-liquidating agencies."

Broad Market

Today's share market was one of the broadest of the current movement, 916 issues being traded, of which 575 advanced, 59 to new highs for the year or longer; 164 declined and 177 were unchanged. Curtiss-Wright was the day's leader on 57,800 shares with a ⅜ net gain. General Motors equaled its 1939 high at 55¾ and closed close to that figure for a rise of ¾. Truck issues were well bought for the third successive day, Yellow Truck being about a point higher on large sales. Dendix, North American Aviation and Aviation Corporation all added substantially to their market value, the first two being at new tops.

Steel common and Republic, with gains of 1¾ and ⅞, respectively, were the most active issues of the group, but Bethlehem advanced more than 2 points. Nonferrous metals joined the advance, International Nickel featuring with a rise of 2⅛. National Gypsum was with the leaders for the second day, adding a large fraction. Gains of one or more points were recorded by Telephone, American Smelting, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Loew's, Johns-Manville, Kennecott, Chrysler and Anaconda. Among individual stocks at new highs were Curtiss-Wright, Douglas, United Aircraft, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck and Midland Steel Products.

The 100 stocks had the highest closing level of the year but at the best of the day, 109.68, just escaped touching the 1939 top of 110.03 recorded September 27. The new 1939 top for the 70 industrial shares in this index was 145.19 against the previous high, 145.06 on September 13. The day's best level for the 30-rail index of 26.81 still was considerably below the 1939 top of 28.49 reached September 27.

Prime Bonds Advance

Listed bonds of all descriptions displayed a good tone today, high grade securities advancing on the renewed institutional demand for investments, while speculative bonds reflected the optimism of the equities section. Foreign dollar securities showed some of the largest gains of the day, owing to the lack of any tendency toward involvment of additional countries in the European conflict. Turnover in all issues was $5,900,000, which is a normal session's business.

United States Treasury bonds moved ahead impressively on indications that the exchange offering covering $526,000,000 December notes is a success. Heavy institutional demand appeared for intermediate maturities, such as the bonds due early in the 1940's. Longest dated bonds were quiet. Gains ranged from 1-32 to 22-32 point, and the demand extended also to the guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations. The December "rights" to the new 1 per cent note issue improved slightly.

Changes were small among the best rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds, but they were mostly in the direction of higher figures. Speculative carrier bonds continued their advance on hopeful forecasts of carloadings returns. Holding company bonds and convertible issues followed their related equities upward. Local tractions had another good day, owing to advances in New York City bonds. Sugar, coal and other commodity bonds fared nicely.

Australian and Canadian bonds were marked sharply higher, the advances ranging to 5 points. Some German issues recovered from recent lows, but Polish bonds were dull. The better grade European neutral issues of Belgium and the Scandinavian countries were strong throughout, and Japanese issues also advanced. Fair demand was noted for some Latin-American obligations, but the buying was selective.

Customers Press Steel Plants for Quick Shipments

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—Steel companies were described by Iron Age magazine today as "being virtually hounded by customers for quicker shipments." "Buyers," the magazine reported, "are flocking to general sales headquarters to bring added pressure to bear for a speeding up of shipments.

"It is not doubted in steel circles that some of the tonnage on their books represents speculative buying, but for the present, at least, the bulk of steel production is going rapidly into consumption, with the probability that steel users will not be able to accumulate much inventory before the first quarter.

"While the present prospects seem to assure a high rate of steel operations for the remainder of the year, it does not necessarily follow that operations of 90 per cent or better are assured through the first quarter," the publication continued.

"The Iron Age estimates ingot production for the current week at 92 per cent, up 1 point over last week.

"Scrap markets, which have undergone a reaction during the past two weeks, appear to be back on a more solid basis. The net result, as reflected by the Iron Age, composite of steel scrap, is a decline of only 12½ cents as compared with one of $1.08 in the preceding week."

Gelanese Corp. Lifts Rayon Yarn Prices

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—A new price list issued by the Celanese Corporation of America names price increases for the company's line of rayon yarns, the trade was informed today.

Effective immediately for December business, the schedule shows boosts ranging from 2 cents a pound for 100 denier sizes and coarse up to 10 cents a pound for 45 denier sizes.

Chicago, Oct. 25 (AP).—Round trip coach fares on all Western Railroads will be reduced temporarily by approximately 5 per cent, effective December 15, the Transcontinental-Western Passenger Association announced today. The new reduction is from 1.9 cents a mile to 1.8 cents.

DroughtPushes Wheat Prices 1 Cent Higher

But Feature of Pit Trading Is 4¾ Cents Jump in Soy Beans

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 25.—Buying encouraged by continued drought in the Southwest today finally lifted wheat futures as much as a cent a bushel. Prices closed ½@⅞ higher after having been only slightly firmer during much of the session.

December wheat was ¾ cent up at 85⅛ and both May and July, the latter representing the new crop, were up a cent at 84⅞ and 83⅝ cents respectively. While light rains were forecast for some of the more Northern States no precipitation was predicted for Kansas, Nebraska or Oklahoma.

A feature of trade today was a rush to buy some beans which shot values up as much as 4¾ cents, December reaching a new season high at 90¼. Buying was attributed to processors and to shorts and was stimulated by expectations of increased export business with Europe.

Wheat closed ½@⅞, up December 85@85⅛, May 84⅝@¾; corn ½@⅞ up, December 50@49¾, May 52¾@⅝; oats ½@⅝ up; soy beans 2¼@3½ up; rye 1⅛ up and lard 10 to 13 cents higher.

Cotton Futures Gain 35 Cents To 40 Per Bale

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—Cotton traders put in buying orders today as they eyed strong action of the stock market and studied implications of official approval of the 1939-40 cotton loan program, closing prices were up 7 to 9 points.

The Department of Agriculture approved cotton program now lacks only Presidential sanction. Buyers found this cheering, brokers said, not so much because a loan would put a floor under the market, but because it might tend to emphasize possibility of a tight supply situation as the season progresses.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 25.—A fresh burst of demand for British government bond had a buoying influence on the entire stock market today. The Von Ribbontrop speech yesterday was apparently ignored. Kaffirs also swung forward, finishing at the day's top marks. Oils advanced sharply and other commodity stocks were marked up. India stocks made good gains following removal of minimum prices on certain issues. Buying in the industrial group was selective but prices easily responded.

Paris.—Bourse quotations leaned to the upside today but traders weren't very anxious to press an advantage either way. Rentes closed 90 centimes lower to 30 higher. Suez Canal gained 385 francs.

Amsterdam.—Broad improvement in domestic equities was not fully maintained in late dealings in the bourse today. Most American stocks held theI. ground.

Liverpool.—Cotton futures closed 3 points higher to 1 lower. Buying was attracted by rumors British interests will acquire Egyptian cotton formerly taken by Germany.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

A hand that caused much comment at one of the city's exclusive clubs recently is shown in today's box. In a duplicate tournament of 13 tables at many of which sat expert pairs only Paul Forester and Jules Rigoni managed to reach six spades. Every team made six spades and many made seven.

The way Forester and Rigoni reached the contract is shown in the box along with the hand. Neither player thought very highly of his bidding yet when it was pointed out that they were the only ones to reach six they conceded that their bidding might not have been so "corny" after all.

In the play, East led a diamond. It was ruffed in dummy, and declarer cashed the ace of clubs, throwing a heart. He played the queen of clubs. West covered with the king and declarer trumped. He next laid down the ace of spades and the king fell.

The rest was simple. Rigoni had only to lead a little trump to dummy's jack, pulling East's last spade, and the clubs were high for the needed heart and diamond discards.

Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield

Chapter 33

"Who'd be crackerjack athletic coaches, I suppose?" suggested Timothy smoothly.

"That's the eye! And scholarships offered to boys that show football promise. Or basketball."

Timothy gave up the pretense that the idea was new, and said, not quite so patiently, "Well, Canby, of course with that sort of thing being done all over the map, I've thought of it myself. One of our trustees is always harping on the idea. But . . ." He was overcome at the memory of his struggles with old Mr. Wheaton.

"Well . . ."

"Well," said Timothy resignedly, "a slick snappy prep school wouldn't fit Clifford needs very accurately, would it? Our tuition fees that you think are funny they're so low, they're so high that Town Meeting never can be got to vote to pay all of them. And a lot of our parents, back-roads farmers, factory hands at the Depot, find it hard to scratch together enough to pay the rest. Why did you suppose M'Sanna Craft got Dewey House started? It's so they can bring the firewood and food from the home farms and not have to pay cash for board. They haven't got the cash."

CANBY MOVED from the sofa to a chair and, for a moment, sat up almost straight, as, pipe in hand, he gave his attention. He looked puzzled. "I don't get you, Uncle Tim. Do you mean you are keeping the school as poor as poverty on purpose?"

Timothy gave a groaning laugh. "Lord no! When I'm in the room with moneyed people—it doesn't happen often, of course—and think what a gift from them would mean, even a little gift, I tremble all over like a dog that sees a piece of meat."

"Well, for heck's sake then! What'd be the matter with moneyed parents?"

"Oh, Canby, use your wits. What comes in from the fees of parents to a snappy up-to-date prep school isn't money the school can use for what it thinks best. Every penny is earmarked for what well-to-do people think best. They don't give cash, they give a promise to pay for a background that will fix in their children the habits and traditions and standards that go with good incomes. How well do you think our Clifford boys and girls would thrive in that background?"

Canby opened his mouth to speak. Timothy said hastily, "I know what you're going to say—scholarships. But they're no go."

"What makes you so sure you know what I was going to say? I never thought of scholarships!"

Timothy apologized. "I thought you were, because that's what usually gets trotted out about this point of this conversation."

Somewhat nettled still, Canby asked, "But now you've mentioned them, what's the matter with them?"

Timothy explained his impatience, "You see, Canby, today may be the first time you've thought of this idea, but it's not exactly a brand new one"

Canby doggedly repeated, "What's the matter with scholarships?"

"Oh, it would take too long to tell you. If you'd ever actually seen how they work, you'd know. They never do what they're supposed to. They turn out to be only a talking point—a kind of smoke-screen to cover up what the school is really not doing for poorer young people."

"Smokescreen?" cried Canby, outraged. "If I ever saw a smoke-screen being thrown up . . .!"

"Yes, I know I'm not being very clear. But you know how hard it is to make anybody understand when he hasn't had the least experience of what you're talking about. What kind of work would you make out of getting me to understand the difference between banking laws in different States? Just take it from me, I'm not theorizing. I've seen your plan tried in plenty of New England academies If you'll excuse my saying so, it's a perfectly obvious idea And exactly the same thing always happens, right away. The local students vanish. You see, about scholarships, there never are enough—nor large enough. Nobody with money enough to be interested in that kind of smart school can possibly imagine how little cash the poorer families up here live on. There'd have to be ten times as many scholarships, ten times bigger, and even then, the general atmosphere . . ."

CANBY was looking oddly at him, he thought. Was he perhaps boring, as well as bored? Was he once more penalizing a casual young question with a verbose, older generation lecture?

He made a short cut to an end. "Now, Canby, just think—you know what our plain young people from the farm and factory are—their clothes, their table manners, their fingernails, their way of speaking. Don't tell me you think they'd be welcome and at home in what's called a 'good' prep school. Neither welcomed nor respected—not really. And not being welcome nor respected, would they thrive, no matter how many bronze memorial gates you had, nor how many cups your basketball team won? The academy is no great shakes of a school, but it does need and respect the students it was founded for. Since it's about the only door open to them, wouldn't it be sort of a pity to push it shut?"

"So that's really why you . . ." began Canby with a rush. He did not finish. Instead, after a pause, he said, cautiously, "You seem to have thought a good deal about this."

"I take it you have given some thought to banking."

"I sure have." He relighted his pipe. "I suppose you know, Uncle Tim, that there are some funny-looking implications wrapped up in all that."

"About what?"

"American ideals."

Timothy laughed once, harshly.

Canby said, "O. K. I get you," shoved the pillows from behind him and sprawled again at full length on the couch. Timothy stepped to the window to look at the thermometer outside, glanced at the clock, kicked the fire together and sat down.

"God! How still it is!" murmured Canby. "Nobody'd believe any place inhabited by humans could be so quiet."

"It's rather late at night, by this time," said Timothy, pointedly. Timothy leaned back in his chair and clasped his hands behind his head again, in his memory-position, hoping to hear Susan's voice. But instead of anything imagined, he heard from above an actual and present sound, very familiar in winter in the old house, with its steep, slate-smooth roof—the whispering rustle of piled-up snow, starting to slide. Knowing what was coming, he listened unconcernedly to the scraping of the huge snow-wave, gathering weight and momentum at it slipped faster and faster, and to its heavy, unresonant plunge from the eaves into the snow-banks below the window. The two masses of snow met each other with a sound so deep as to be almost below audibility; but the suddenly displaced air rattled the loose old window frames and shook the eardrums.

At the first slipping noise, while the tons of snow were rushing down the steep slope of the roof—it sounded rather as though the house were being torn in two—Canby sprang up from his prostrate sprawl, in one powerful reflex, crying, "What's that? What's that?" But at once, as the windows rattled, he recognized the sound, said sheepishly, "Oh, yes, I remember," and sat down.

A small, shocking, animal-like noise from Aunt Lavinia, instantly strangled, brought him to his feet again. Both men turned toward her. What they saw froze Canby. But Timothy was at her side instantly, saying urgently, "Aunt Lavinia! Lavvy dear! it's all right. You're safe, Lavinia!"

She could not at once find her way out from the terror which made her cower low, shrinking back in her chair, turning her head to glare up from under her eyebrows at him like a trapped animal. Timothy put his hand on her arm and shook her gently, "Wake up, Lavinia. It's Tim." She slowly drew her gaze away from his face to look down at his hand, and quailed away from it. She looked as though she might die of fright.

"The whiskey, Canby. On the sideboard."

CANBY RACED into the dining room, snatched the bottle and a glass and returned on the run. The old woman had made herself small and smaller. Her hands were pressed hard over her eyes. Timothy, his hand steady, his face sad and unsurprised, poured half a glass, got down a little stiffly, on one knee, put his arm around her and said in a peremptory voice, "Lavinia! See here! You must drink this." He took her hands down forcibly from her gray face and held the glass to her lips.

The raw liquor burned her lips, burned her throat, burned away the horror from her eyes. She shuddered. The color of her face changed from a ghastly ash-yellow to her usual paleness. She took the glass into her own hands and drank again. The ignoble terror in her eyes dissolved, her face blurred, changed back into her own. She looked down at the glass and said crossly, "Tim! What's got into ye, giving it to me this way? Ye know I hate it raw."

"Well, that's so. I forgot," said Timothy, hauling himself to his feet. "Canby, go see if the kettle is boiling. We'll all have a nightcap before we go to bed."

He took the glass from her hand—it was almost empty—and carried it into the kitchen where the kettle sang on the back of the stove. Canby, looking sick, leaned against the wall. "For God's sake, what's she so afraid of?" he asked in a whisper. Timothy with shrugged shoulders said wordlessly that he hadn't the least idea, and with a vague wave of the hand intimated that it was nothing of any consequence anyhow, an old woman's notion. "Where are the lemons?" he asked, reaching for the sugar.

She looked quite herself again when they went back, her chin wiped dry of saliva, a corner of soiled underwear that had been showing at her neck, pushed out of sight, a light in her eyes. They drank together cheerfully. Aunt Lavinia drained her glass quickly and held it up empty to show Canby. It was a stirrup-cup to his going around the world, she told him with an unusual mellowness and just a faint thickening of the tongue. He made no answer, drinking down his steaming toddy absentmindedly. Timothy tried to keep the talk brisk with questions about Canby's singularly complex family circle. "Did Ruth go into teaching? Was young Herb ever able to get a patent on the invention he made?" Ruth was the daughter of Canby's stepfather's second wife. Herbert was her half-brother by an earlier marriage. Canby's step-relatives were a standing joke.

Canby did not seem to find the subject as humorous as usual. After he had finished his toddy he sat heavily, his big hands dropped between his knees. "I don't know about Ruth. I never heard whether Herb got his patient," he said. But he looked up with a start when Aunt Lavinia said, "Come on. Let's go to bed. If I go now while I'm half-seas over with that horrid raw drink you made me take, I'll surely not lie awake. And Canby's got to leave early."

"I'm not so sure," said Canby. "I'm not so sure about that."

They looked at him, astonished. "I'm not so sure I want to go on that cruise at all," he explained. "Just batting around don't look so hot to me now. I never was really crazy about it. I just didn't know what else to do with myself."

"What else would you rather do?" asked Aunt Lavinia.

"I don't know, Aunt Lavvy." Canby told her uncertainly. "I really don't know. Maybe stay here a little longer. If you and Uncle Tim will lodge me and Miss Beck board me. Seems kind of good to be back, see? Maybe if I stick around for a while I might find something to do in these parts." He turned to Timothy. "That was really what I was thinking about, Uncle Tim, just now. Maybe you guessed it. I was the young businessman who might pep up the Academy. But I get your point." He ran his fingers through his rumpled hair thoughtfully. "Anyhow, what I'd rather do, is to make something with my hands. Well, something might turn up. A person coming in from the outside sees an opening, sometimes, that nobody else thought of. It sort of came to me today that I'd like to give the old place the once over before I tried anything else. If I wouldn't be in your way."

AUNT LAVINIA'S considerable dose of alcohol predisposed her to any idea presented. "Well, well, why not? We never use that extra third-story room. I like to have a man around that's young enough to feel his oats. A kinsman too."

"In the clan! In the clan!" insisted Aunt Lavina genially.

"Now understand, this is no go, unless you'll let me pay for my—unless it's a regular business arrangement," said Canby awkwardly. "It's all off if you don't."

"You can have it anyway you like, of course, Canby. Can't he, Tim?"

"Oh, of course" Said Timothy. "Anything he likes."

Aunt Lavinia had a qualm. "But look here, Canby, all the young people here are mad to get away. And all the clever ones do. Are you sure you want to stay? Clifford is the deadest little hole in creation."

"Gosh, no, Aunt Lavinia. I'm not sure! I'm not the least bit sure of anything. Maybe when I wake up tomorrow I'll feel like studying law. Or going to Hollywood. Damned if I know what I want. But I know a thing or two I don't want. And that cruise is one of them, see? I got to thinking about it today, and I could hear the women cackle."

Aunt Lavinia said derisively, "If you think there's no cackling here . . ."

"But a person doesn't have to stay on the same deck with it. A man can get on his old clothes and beat it off to the woods."

"Well, that's settled then," said Aunt Lavinia, losing interest. She stirred weakly in her chair. "Canby, I feel more than usually like an ancient foundered horse. Take your turn at heaving me up to my feet, will you, and give your Uncle Tom a rest?"

"That's one of the things I thought maybe I could do if I stayed," remarked Canby. Stooping, he picked her up and carried her briskly to the top of the stairs. Timothy looked after them. The powerful young back was as straight as if he were carrying a child. "There," he said, setting her on her feet at the top. The effort had not so much as quickened his pulse. His chest rose and fell slowly and regularly as he smiled at the old woman. A little color had come into her pale face. She smiled back at him. "The very riband upon the cap of youth," she told him, and gave his cheek a pat.
